PREFACE

This symposium grew out of informal departmental discussions seeking new ideas concerning the effectiveness of health education, particularly as it is applied to the purchase of health related products and services. Two specific objectives were established to guide the program: 1) to bring together a cross section of experts to discuss, each from his/her own perspective, issues of consumers and their behavior in purchasing health related goods and services. By providing a platform of notable speakers we hoped to achieve the second objective, to attract interested people from the university community, Lincoln, and surrounding communities. We hoped that new contacts within the university and the community would stimulate, support, and expand the work related to health education already underway in the Nebraska Center for Health Education.

The success of the symposium was due to a large number of people working together. Special thanks is due to Ms. Katherine Farrell who supervised all the administrative and organizational details and traveled across the country to convince prospective speakers that a couple of days spent in Nebraska would be a worthwhile experience. Dr. Ned Hedges and Dr. S. I. Fuenning welcomed participants and visitors to the symposium. Individual sessions were chaired by Drs. Richard Wilson, Robert Robertson, Robert Mittelstaedt, and Mr. Robert Guthmann. This symposium benefitted from supporting sponsorship of the Health Care Studies Section of the Department of Medical and Education Administration, the Cardiovascular Center, both of the University of Nebraska Medical College; the College of Business Administration, the Department of Adult and Continuing Education, the University of Nebraska—Lincoln, the Students Council on Health, all of the University of Nebraska—Lincoln, and the Association for Consumer Research.

An activity of this type places considerable workloads on secretarial and clerical staff members. Special thanks go to Ms. Ardis Lewis, Mrs. Carey Esposito, and Mrs. Debbie Weinrich, who patiently tolerated disruptions in procedure from this symposium. Editorial assistance provided by Ms. Laura Casari was greatly appreciated.

This symposium would have remained nothing more than an idea without the support of the University of Nebraska Foundation and a grant from Mr. and Mrs. Morton Steinhart of Nebraska City, Nebraska. Those who participated in the symposium and those who benefit from these proceedings owe a debt of gratitude to the Steinharts for their continued support of activities of this type.
