Welcome, readers, to our November issue of Nebraska Libraries! Can you believe that this issue will be wrapping up two years of publishing? As always, I would love to hear your comments about what you like, what you dislike, what you’d like to see in future issues, and more! Please email me your thoughts.

Just like last year’s November issue, this edition will remind you of your newly elected NLA officers! If you see them please give them a big congratulations and show them you appreciate their willingness to step into a leadership role for our organization. If you are interested in getting more involved with NLA it is never too late to think about running next year. In our November issue we also feature the NLA Treasurer’s report for historical purposes since it is now the end of the fiscal year.

In this issue we have some excellent feature articles. We have our second Featured Libraries piece. This month Rachel Kenny spoke with the South Sioux City Public Library’s director, David Mixdorf, about their wonderful library. You may have visited it during our recent NLA/NSLA annual conference in October!

Some other features include Amy Wenzl discussing programming for adults with disabilities and Robin Clark talking about her historical storytelling experiences. Of course, our feature articles are joined by columns from our various sections and round tables.

Starting next year, Nebraska Libraries will try some themed issues. Look forward to these unrolling in February with programming, May with digitization, August with small libraries, and November with access topics. Our next issue will be in February with a submission deadline of January 1st! The editorial board will begin soliciting authors shortly, but don’t hesitate to contact me right now if you have an idea for the journal.

I would also like to congratulate editorial board member Rachel Zill for getting married this October! For those of you who know her, or have been contacted by her with regard to writing for the journal, please note that she is now Rachel Kenny!

Please email me at nlaeditor@nebraskalibraries.org.

Editor, Nebraska Libraries
This month Rachel Kenny talked with David Mixdorf, the director of the South Sioux City Public Library at 1615 1st Avenue, South Sioux City, NE 68776, about his wonderful library.

Please tell our readers a little bit about the overall layout of your library building, initial construction, and funding considerations.

The design of the library is prairie style. I see the look of a Conestoga Wagon in the design. The north side of the building was an existing building that was remodeled into classrooms for the Community College (ESL and GED classes) and the library meeting room. The south side was built from the ground up. This is the tenth year for the present building. The original building was an old building about 4,000 square feet. The present building is 16,000 square feet and we are already feeling cramped! The majority of the funds were raised by donations.

The birds in the South Sioux City Public Library’s aviary. Visit the library online at http://www.southsiouxcity.org/department/?structureid=10

The first thing I noticed about your library is the aviary. Tell me a little bit about how this all got started and what it takes to keep it going.

The aviary was a donation from a patron. The overall cost of the aviary was around $12,000. The library foundation and the library budget pick up the cost of upkeep which is around $4,000 a year. We get donations for the birds totaling around $600 a year. It is enjoyed by many people. Many a time I see families sitting on the bench for 30 minutes just looking at the birds. At this time I have not heard of any other libraries with an aviary.

Can you tell me a bit about your garden club and seed saving program? What makes it unique?

The garden club and the seed saving program grew out of programs the library and the County Extension Service taught for our residents who were new to the United States. The first year we established two community garden spots, taught six garden classes and gave away seeds and plants. Each year it has grown and we now offer a garden group meeting each month, gardening and canning classes, and orchard classes. We now have two community garden locations with plans for two more, plus a farmers market and a community orchard. In March of 2015 we will be hosting an Apple Tree Grafting workshop with Seed Savers Exchange.
How is your library responding to the changing needs of our patrons?

We are seeing an increase in e-book check outs but we have so many patrons where English is not their first language we haven’t seen a gigantic shift in checkouts. The biggest change I have noticed is with Wi-Fi usage. All of our high school students are assigned their own laptops now. Many of our younger patrons use smart phones and other electronic devices to access the Internet so we have seen a decrease in the usage of patron computers. I would estimate half of our computer usage during daytime hours are from people without library cards. Program opportunities stem a lot from the type of patrons we have. We offer around 75 technology programs in English and in Spanish per month. They start at 10 a.m. and run till closing time.

How many staff members does your library have? How do their various roles coincide to provide the best service?

We have four full-time and six part-time staff. Everyone on staff does something besides their assigned task. Everyone has done some type of program plus seven of the staff members teach tech classes. We offer around 1,500 programs a year so everyone does something that they have an interest in. Also, all of our staff is assigned a certain section of the collection and they are responsible for weeding and ordering materials for that section. I find this works best because in the past you could see preference areas in the collection of the person who did the ordering. For example, we had 12 shelves of cookbooks but only 12 books on hunting, fishing, and archery.

The 2014 annual NLA/NSLA conference was in South Sioux City this year. What did it take to plan an annual conference from the initial hosting offer to the big day?

I was only the partners and donor chair so I’m not an expert on putting together the conference. Most of my busy time was a week up to the conference and during the conference. I assigned the social hour at the library to the staff. They had more experience in that type of thing. My concept of a social hour is fixing brats and serving cold beer during a football game. It is a difficult task trying to do conference responsibilities plus your regular responsibilities of the library.

What can we look forward to for the future of South Sioux City Public Library?

We are planning on adding Apple computers with the prospect of doing films and teaching classes on film editing, creating small Maker kits that individuals can check out, putting together small vacation travel kits, sensory storytimes for children with disabilities, and graphic cartoon art classes.

Rachel Zill is a Library Assistant at Clarkson College and at Baird Holm LLP. She is interning at the Union Pacific Railroad Museum while completing her Master’s in Library Science from the University of Missouri-Columbia.

David Mixdorf has been the Director of South Sioux City Public Library for five years. Previous to that, he worked as a school librarian for six years. He has also been a teacher, a job coach, a camp director, a military policeman, a radio DJ, a butcher, a baker, and a candlestick maker. In his free time he likes to garden, juggle, perform magic, participate in Renaissance fairs, read westerns and mysteries, raise heritage breeds of chickens and rabbits, and visit zoos and fairs. Here is a photo of David hard at work in his office.
According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, autism prevalence has risen to one in eighty-eight children; this is a 1,000 percent increase over the last forty years (2012, 13). These children represent just one segment of the one in fourteen children in school with an identified special need. Both public libraries and public schools endeavor to provide a welcoming and nurturing environment where all children can feel comfortable learning and exploring, but, as these children grow older and age out of the system, it becomes much more difficult to find affordable programs that can meet these adults’ educational and social needs.

At Sump Memorial Library in Papillion, Nebraska, library staff were seeing increased numbers of adults with disabilities, not only utilizing the library space and resources but also showing interest in attending library programming, such as children’s storytimes, science programs, craft programs, etc. Although staff members wanted these adults to feel welcome in the library, their attendance at children’s programming caused some difficulties. Parents of young children expressed concern that an unknown adult wanted to interact with their child; when programs were set up, the space was designed to fit the needs of small children and was not properly outfitted to support an adult; and, ultimately, these programs were designed to meet the needs of children and did not take into account the experiences and the maturity level of these adults.

Seeking to rectify this situation, I spoke with my director about creating library programming specifically geared toward and designed for these adults with disabilities. An application was made to the Nebraska Eastern Library System for a grant to purchase materials to be used in the facilitation of these programs. After receiving the grant, we designed a monthly one-hour program for adults with disabilities in the Papillion community. The first “Fun with Friends” program was held in March of 2014 in the library’s meeting room. We learned a great deal throughout the planning and facilitation phases of this project. The following considerations are my suggestions to those considering adding programming for adults with disabilities to their library.

What Type of Program Is Your Community Looking For?

Would a storytime-based program with a craft element interest your intended audience, or are they looking for a program with more of a science or art focus rather than traditional literacy? If they do prefer a storytime format, non-fiction or realistic fiction may be better received, but you will have to try out different genres and see what works best for your community. Reach out to individuals and organizations in your community and library. Discover if there are any other organizations in your area currently providing book clubs, art programs, etc. Are these programs prohibitively expensive for the adults you are seeking to serve?

Will You Focus on Bringing Individuals Into Your Library or Groups?

At Sump, the core of the monthly group at Fun with Friends is comprised of individuals from one organization. Working with an organization can guarantee numbers at every program, but it can also create other difficulties. You will need to remind the group of the date and time of programs on a regular basis, emphasizing the need for punctuality. It is always harder to get ten adults loaded into a van than it is to get one or two. It requires advanced planning. Having one person walk into a program late is easy to overlook. Having ten people walk in late stops a program in its tracks. Even if the program facilitator tries to continue, the entire group is distracted.
You may also have to cater to the desires of this organization. The organization answers to the guardians of these adults, and they may have specific program requirements already in place that need to be met. For instance, several regular adult patrons and their guardians expressed interest in a Santa storytime at Sump, but the group we worked with (or the guardians they answered to) felt that such an event would not be appropriate for their group. They were seeking programs about science, nature, hygiene, nutrition, etc. This greatly altered our original program plans.

Caregivers Required vs. Respite

Do you want your program to act as respite care, giving caregivers a break from their responsibilities to rest and relax? Do your staff members have the training or education needed to facilitate a program without caregivers present? Such a program may also require additional insurance for your facility, so the city may need to be brought in to discuss the program. At Sump Memorial Library, we required caregivers to be present. This could make it harder for some individuals to attend, but it also allowed the library to host the program with only one or two staff members present. Hosting programs that involved food was difficult with the group at Sump due to a number of health and diet restrictions. Having caregivers present ensured library staff were not expected to know everyone’s individual restrictions.

Tying back into the second consideration, typically, a facility that provides residential or day services to adults with disabilities will only be able to send a small number of caregivers with the group. This will require library staff to be more hands on during the program to help fill in as needed.

Staff Time

Who will run the program at your library, adult or youth services staff? Depending upon the program type chosen by your library, youth services staff may have more experience with the program format. At Sump, adult services staff ran the program, but I also had experience in... youth services so I was familiar with the juvenile collection and basic program formats.

Will staff plan and facilitate every program, or will presenters be brought in? Paying facilitators with experience working with adults with disabilities to lead the program will save staff time, but it may also be more expensive. Craft- or art-based programs led by library staff may reduce program costs, but they take additional time and, if they conflict with other youth services programming, then additional craft supplies may need to be purchased for the adult department.

Do you have staff members who can work flexible schedules, including evenings or weekends, if that is the best program time for your community? If caregivers are required, an evening program may work better for those working during the day. If working with an organization, a mid-morning program that ends before lunch may be preferred.

Can the library accommodate a weekly program if it is requested? At Sump, we had multiple requests for a weekly program, but we were only able to host a monthly program due to staff limitations. Is outreach another option for your staff?

Although caregivers were required at our program at Sump, we still tried to design programs that would accommodate a variety of developmental and ability levels. We didn’t want caregivers to take over the project or experience. We frequently had attendees who were non-verbal or who had limited mobility in their arms or legs. Projects needed to be able to be completed in alternate ways if attendees lacked the fine motor skills required to complete the project as planned.

The best programs included a craft or project that didn’t have one specific final result. Attendees could use their imaginations. One example of this would be the large painted butterflies we created on bed sheets. We had the butterfly outline pre-drawn, but the adults decided how they wanted to paint or decorate the butterflies. Foam paint brushes were supplied, but attendees could use their hands or fingers if they were unable to hold a brush or wanted a more sensory friendly experience. Interactive programs such as the butterfly program (which also included butterfly bingo) were the best received, as auditory based learning can be difficult for many adults.

Privacy

At Sump, we were used to taking photos or videos in our programs. Since attendees were in a public building, we didn’t worry about release forms. If someone didn’t want their photo taken, they, or their parents, just let us know. But when working with an organization for Fun with Friends, the guardians of the attendees were not present so library staff created a new photo and video release form which was emailed to the organization. The organization then mailed copies to the guardians of the attendees. Some of the forms were returned, but others were not. This process took some time, but it protected the contact information of the guardians and the privacy of the program attendees.

There is no perfect program type that I can share; every community is different, and library staff will have to discover what their community is seeking. I can say that this has been an incredibly rewarding experience for everyone involved at Sump Memorial Library, and the return on investment has exceeded expectations. It allowed the library to serve an underserved population in the community while forming new community connections, and it allowed staff to grow personally and professionally. The library continues to host its monthly program, Fun with Friends, which retains regular numbers of between 12 and 20 adults, and the attendees of the program have even begun to feel comfortable enough in the library and with library staff to attend other adult programming. I hope the sharing of our experiences will encourage the creation of library programming for adults with disabilities in other communities across the state.

Take Time to Tell

Robin Clark

Last year Papillion, Nebraska hosted the Nebraska Chautauqua Free Land? 1862 and the Shaping of America program a block from the library. Central to the Chautauqua experience are the scholar portrayals of historical figures under the Chautauqua tent. Each Chautauquan gives a 40-minute, first-person presentation as his or her historical character and then answers questions (Humanities Nebraska, 2013). Our library hosted, among other events, the youth camp which was led by two historical performers out of Admire, Kansas, who operate Ride into History. Both Anne Birney and Joyce Theirer are scholars—Ann with a doctoral degree in American Studies from the University of Kansas, Joyce with a doctoral degree in American History from Kansas State University. They perform on the Kansas Humanities Council, Kansas Arts Commission’s Kansas Arts on Tour and Mid-American Arts Alliance rosters.

For several years, Wanda Butts and I have performed a first person pioneer woman narrative for Pioneer Days in Papillion. The Papillion Historical Association, in collaboration with the Papillion La Vista Schools’ Foundation, tour every fourth grader through our library, the 1890 Portal schoolhouse, the late 1860s Sautter farmhouse, and what used to be the Sarpy County courthouse jail, now located on the fourth floor of the Papillion City Hall. Both the farmhouse and the courthouse are on the Nebraska National Register. Because of the rich history so visually apparent in our community, and with the school and farmhouse located on library grounds, our narrative was based on the story of coming to the Sarpy area from another state. The narrative changed and developed over the years, and for the past two years, Wanda has been the main storyteller while I have taken a back-up role.

After the Papillion Chautauqua and talking with Ann and Joyce, Wanda and I learned that Ride into History sponsored a storytelling workshop twice a year at their site in Admire, Kansas. Wanting to develop our performances, we decided to attend the Preserving the Past through Performance workshop in August of last year. It is an immersion workshop, lasting two full days. We learned how to choose a character, tips for doing historical research, scriptwriting, setting, what’s a good story, creating our “look,” and information on storytelling as a business. Each participant is expected to have a performance ready for presentation by noon on Sunday, followed by time to rewrite/redo with a second performance at 5 p.m.

While Wanda focused on her pioneer woman presentation which was loosely based on her mother’s family, I was not sure about my presentation. The more I realized that my maternal grandmother, born in 1899, would have a story that would be worth telling. My performance, the story of Mary Hengstenberg Jones, is a story of an ordinary Nebraska woman who does extraordinary things to keep her family together. Entitled “Coming Home,” it’s told in first person as a woman reflects on the past fifteen years (1930-1945) as she prepares to celebrate the homecoming of her two sons at the end of World War II. Mary talks about what it was like to live in south central Nebraska during the Great Depression. Drought, poverty, death, and mental illness take their toll on her but do not dampen her enthusiasm for her family and her sons’ safe and victorious return to Nebraska.

Research for storytelling can take many forms. I searched for online historical resources for the time period that I was representing. While looking for period recipes from the ’30s I stumbled across a treasure trove of information in an online Federal Writer’s Project of the Works Progress Administration for the State of Nebraska entitled, Nebraska: A Guide to the Cornhusker State (WPA Guide). I had hit the mother lode of information for the time period I was researching. I found facts and dates there that helped flesh out the stories that had been handed down for generations in my family. I used microfilms of local newspapers, local historical websites, Ancestry.com, HeritageQuest Online, and even mined the census data looking for any possible connections to Mary’s story. I found that reference librarians and archivists can be one of the best resources for a storyteller. I was sorting family photos from that time period and enlisted help from the state library and the Nebraska Memories project to authenticate and date the images. Besides your own family stories, the Nebraska Memories project is an excellent place to search for inspiration for a story to tell about a particular event or time period.

Storytelling can and should evoke many different emotions in an audience. “Coming Home” encourages people to reflect on (or in some cases learn about) the Great Depression, drought, the war years, and the losses and victories that our nation suffered during those hard times. At times light hearted and with a happy ending, there are parts of “Coming Home” that tug at your heart because of the pain that Mary endured as a wife and mother.

Ride into History asks each participant to make a commitment to perform their presentation within a year of attending the workshop. Wanda and I presented our program—HERstory—at the Sarpy County Historical Museum to a crowd of over sixty people. We were extremely pleased with the questions and memories that were shared by the participants after the performances. The conversations that day led to more questions with a greater need for research at the library and at the museum to seek out answers, proving an impetus for lifelong learning. Storytelling as an art can be a rich addition to your professional dossier, enhance library program offerings, and connect members of the community through historical remembrances.

SCYP Vice Chair/Chair Elect

Rebecca Brooks is the Assistant Library Director and Creative Director at the Gretna Public Library. She has a BA in English literature from Wichita State University. You may have read one of her articles featured in Nebraska Library Association’s Nebraska Libraries Journal.

Intellectual Freedom Round Table Vice Chair/Chair Elect

K. Joan Birnie – Over my 25 years as Director of the Broken Bow Public Library, it has been my pleasure to serve the Nebraska Library Association in various capacities, and I had the privilege of being President of NLA in 2005-2006. Being asked to run for Vice Chair of the Intellectual Freedom Round Table is an honor as I am very passionate about protecting our constitutional rights. Working in a library makes us constantly aware of how important it is that people have a right to privacy as well as the right to freedom and expression of thought. Because my husband and I are owners of radio stations in Broken Bow, I am extremely conscious of any attempts to restrict freedoms of press and speech as an informed public is vital to any decision making process. I am currently starting my second term on the Nebraska ACLU Board of Directors and know how closely they work with libraries on intellectual freedom concerns and issues. It would be an honor to serve as Vice Chair of IFRT.

Intellectual Freedom Round Table Secretary

Brenda Ealey is the branch manager of Gere Library for Lincoln City Libraries (LCL)—going on a year and a half in that position. Prior to her position with LCL she was the Administrator for Southeast Library System for 15 years. She has a BA in psychology and a master's in library science from Emporia University. She’s been active in Nebraska Library Association for many years and in various roles, including NLA President and chair of the Legislative and Intellectual Freedom Committees. She enjoys music—both as a musician and as a listener—and serves on the board of a local independent radio station. She is also passionate about Free Speech and serves on the board of ACLU Nebraska. She enjoys sports of all kinds, especially biking and jogging. Her daughter, Lily, is a favorite companion and just completed her freshman year at Hastings College. Brenda is passionate about free speech and serves on the board of ACLU Nebraska. She believes librarians have the momentous task of providing access to information and the library’s resources for all their citizens through equity of service, resistance of censorship, protection of privacy, and provision of confidentiality. Intellectual freedom, the First amendment and the Library Bill of Rights continue to be guides in meeting the myriad of challenges in today’s library communities.

Information Technology and Access Round Table Vice Chair/Chair Elect

Hello! Mark Sorensen, Library Specialist in business outreach with Omaha Public Library, here and I am glad to serve as a candidate for ITART vice chair. I’ll guarantee you’ve had applicants with more technical savvy—I’m a history buff, a bookbinder by hobby, and my most recent professional training was in conservation. Along the way, though, I picked up a passion for digital preservation and the power of open data and shared collections to inform and protect our cultural heritage from a local to global scale. Long story short, I love my job but I’d entertain offers from the Black Hills Knowledge Network or the British Library at the drop of a hat. Of course, knowing the value of access to information and information technology is just one part of being an effective vice chair. Since July 2013, I’ve been participating in intensive training for project management and facilitation. It’s helped me refine a skill set that should be a perfect fit for the logistical duties of the position, supporting a productive year for ITART.

New Members Round Table Vice Chair/Chair Elect

My name is Anneka Ramirez. I am currently an MLS student in the University of Missouri program. I earned my BA in American cultural studies from Western Washington University in Bellingham, WA. I am currently serving on the Eastern Library System Board of Directors as a student representative. I am a Norfolk, NE, native and just recently moved back to my hometown after serving as the director of the Scribner Public Library from 2011-2013. I also just began a position in the newly formed Service Center at Northeast Community College as a Service Center Specialist. I really enjoy reading, crocheting, bike riding, writing poetry, lazing about when time allows, and lots more. I decided to run for vice chair of NMRT because I want to be a more active member of NLA and have a chance to pass on the friendly and helpful welcome to libraryland I received almost three years ago.

New Members Round Table Secretary

My name is Terri Rickel and I have worked for the University of Nebraska Libraries since October 2001. Even though I have been on staff here for a while, I am still new to NMRT and NLA. I am working for user services which includes interlibrary loan and circulation. I attended my first NLA in the fall of 2013 and gave a presentation there on Microsoft Lync. Since that time, I have become more active in NLA and have agreed to at least two more presentations for NLA related events. I attended the Nebraska Library Leadership Institute last summer and look forward to putting all these skills to use for NMRT and NLA.

Technical Services Round Table Vice Chair/Chair Elect

Emily Dust Nimsakont is the Cataloging Librarian at the Nebraska Library Commission, a position she has held since October of 2008. In addition to her duties at NLC, she teaches cataloging classes as an adjunct instructor for UNO and the University of Missouri—Columbia.

Emily earned her master’s degree in library science from the University of Missouri—Columbia. She also holds a master’s degree in museum studies from UNL and a bachelor’s degree in history and psychology from Knox College in Galesburg, Illinois.

Emily has been an active member of the Nebraska Library Association. She worked as the association’s webmaster from 2008 to 2010. She served as Vice Chair, Chair, and Past Chair of the New Members Round Table, and she is currently the webmaster for the Technical Services Round Table. She also served on the 2011 NLA Conference Planning Committee.

Technical Services Round Table Secretary

Euem Osmera – I grew up as an “Air Force brat.” Dad’s job took us through three continents: Asia, Europe, and North America. It was quite adventurous to learn the dialects of different countries and states, and one particular favorite would be the southern one. It took all of one day for me to say, “Hi ya’all” instead of “Hi you guys!” Also it would not be uncommon to hear me combine a Thai, German, and southern drawl in a conversation.

I am working as a Digital/Tangible Media Cataloger at the McGoogan Library of Medicine, University of Nebraska Medical Center. My main duties are to catalog all formats, create authority, clean-up the database, offer reference service, and teach.

Young Adult Round Table Secretary

My name is Odessa Cooley. I have worked in the South Sioux City Public Library since June 1, 2009. I am the youth librarian and work with youth from birth to 18. Here at the library, we have a very well-functioning Teen Advisory Board, which I started in 2010, and we are working on starting a Minions group—this is like TAB but for middle school students. We have run around 30 youth programs a month for all ages in our community. I am currently taking classes for my associates’ degree in library science.
I would like to thank all nominees who stepped forward to serve in NLA leadership positions: Julee Hector, Angela Kroeger, Matthew Williams, Rebecca Bernthal, Dana Boden, Jayne Germer, Terry Wingate, Brenda Ealey, Matt Kovar, Julie Pinnell, Tina Walker, Sara Nelson, Kristine Woods, Bailey Halbur, Aimee Owen, David Mixdorf, Pat Leach, Amy Hafer, Heather St.Clair, Jill Annis, Rebecca Brooks, Tom Schmitz, Joan Birnie, Deb Robertson, Mark Sorenson, Terri Rickel, Anneka Ramirez, Katherine Woods, Dana Schipporeit, Nannette Bedrosky, Emily Dust Nimsakont, Billie Cotterman, Euem Osmera, and Odessa Cooley.

I would also like to thank current Section and Round Table chairs who worked hard to find great nominees for their available positions. And, of course, I would like to thank the members of the Nominating Committee for doing the legwork to find great nominees for NLA officer positions.

If you have any questions about the results or the election process, please feel free to ask me. Thank you!

Gordon Wyant is the Adult Services Librarian at the Bellevue Public Library. You can reach him at Gordon.Wyant@bellevue.net.
NLA Financials—Treasurer’s Annual Report

Megan Klein-Hewett

This is a transitional time for NLA’s finances due to last year’s vote to change NLA’s fiscal year from a calendar year to October through September. The financial report represents only three quarters and the new fiscal year began on October 1. The 2014 budget was written as a three-quarter budget so all numbers take into account a shortened fiscal year.

Probably because of the shortened fiscal year, NLA is in the green! Thanks to a larger than expected conference profit from last year, as well as some tough spending cuts made at the beginning of the year, we have finished the year with a positive number.

However, membership continues to drop which means less income through both dues and conference profit. Please continue to encourage membership in NLA!

Barbara Hegr, the past treasurer, has worked with NLA’s accountant to finalize the 2013 books and has filed all tax reports.

The 2014/2015 budget was approved at the September 12, 2014, board meeting.

Resource sharing among libraries can greatly enhance users’ access to information, and in turn, elevate users’ value of local libraries. While the concept of resource sharing appropriately brings to mind terms like "interlibrary loan" and "consortium purchasing," reciprocal borrowing agreements also provide significant benefits to library users. Under such agreements, library users are permitted to borrow materials directly from libraries other than their “home library.” This service has been especially valuable to online/distance education students seeking to use the print or video resources of nearby libraries.

For several years, the College and University Section has maintained an online directory of reciprocal borrowing policies among Nebraska’s academic libraries. This webpage has been one of the most frequently used resources on the C&U website based on usage statistics and users’ testimonials. This summer, the C&U Section solicited updates to these policies, and has recently published this compilation at: http://nebraskalibraries.org/cu/reciprocal-borrowing/

At this webpage, users may review the terms of reciprocal borrowing agreements among Nebraska academic libraries. Links to view a list of participating academic libraries and “Borrowing by Library” are also available from this page; the latter provides a printer-friendly matrix summarizing each institution’s reciprocal borrowing privileges by affiliation and material type. Having this information in advance may inform users’ decisions regarding where to drive to check out a needed resource. Contact information for each library is also available if there are specific questions about an institution’s reciprocal borrowing terms.

I would like to thank Marcia Dority Baker of the University of Nebraska’s Law Library for her efforts in designing the survey form, and to Becky Wymer of Creighton University Libraries for her work in formatting this data into a usable format. Many librarians across the state also contributed to this directory by submitting their institution’s updated policy information. If your institution is not listed, it’s not too late to be added. Please contact me at ritterbushjr@unk.edu. We hope this directory will be of value to all Nebraska librarians and library users to support lifelong learning in our communities and online.

Planning continued this summer for the 2015 College and University Section’s Spring meeting, which will be held in conjunction with the Kansas College and University Library Section. This joint meeting will be held on May 29, 2015, at Doane College with librarians from both Nebraska and Kansas academic libraries represented. Karen Williams, the Dean of Libraries at the University of Arizona and 2014-15 ACRL President, will be the meeting’s keynote speaker. The officers of the Nebraska and Kansas sections are excited about this collaborative venture, and are also planning to hold a joint meeting in Kansas during Spring 2016. More information will be forthcoming on the C&U website and on the members’ email listserv.

Jon Ritterbush is the E-Resources and Serials Librarian at the University of Nebraska-Kearney’s Calvin T. Ryan Library, and is the 2013-14 Chair of the C&U Section.
I was reading Gail Formanack’s column in a recent Eastern Library System newsletter and that got me thinking about how libraries have changed over the years. This got me to thinking about how I got into the library profession.

When I learned to read, I discovered a new world. I loved to read; it was a method of escape for me. I could shut out the world. When I was 12, we moved to a larger town and I found the public library. I would go there and check out my limit of five books and then go back a few days later and check out five more. One day it came to me that working in a library had to be the best job, just being surrounded by books all day. I did not go to the library and get assistance from anyone. I just browsed and found books. I did not have a favorite librarian; I do not even remember anyone in particular. Twenty-eight years later I finally became a librarian.

I have since realized that back then, I had no idea what librarians or anyone else who worked in a library did while they were at work. I remember the librarian from my school just because she would always glare at us when we came in the library to do school work and told us to keep quiet. I actually went in there by myself to get books, and she would not glare at me. Anyway, other than trying to keep students quiet, I had no idea what a school librarian did either.

When I was a senior in high school I did a college visit and talked to the Library Science department and found out a little about library school. The thing that I really remember is that a master’s degree was part of being a librarian.

So, now it is twenty-eight years later from when I thought about being a librarian and I had finally reached that goal after other jobs and experiences. The job and the library have changed a lot from when I entered a library at the age of 12. Back then, everything was paper—paper card catalog, paper library cards, paper date due stamp cards, and paper reminder cards. We used paper reference materials for research. When I was at college in the mid ‘90s and in a reference class, the teacher showed us a new computer application called “gopher” from the University of Minnesota. It was hard to use, did not always work, and had very limited results. I remember many times during the course that it would stop working. A couple of years later in another class, more sites were available, and they were putting on color pictures. Yes, this was the Internet.

Now in 2014, we use the Internet every day—at work, at home, and almost everywhere else. We connect to people using social media, texting, and email. I would be stymied at work without access to a computer and the Internet. I have helped people use all sorts of devices to access the library and materials. If we have a question, we just connect to the Internet to find the answer. We can keep track of scores of games, watch the games, and countless number of things.

So the question is—what is the future going to bring? When e-books were first introduced some said that was the end of the print book and therefore libraries. It still has not happened. There are still many people who cannot afford the devices to access e-books or to buy the e-books. Most libraries do not have the funding to purchase every book in print and e-book format.

I have read articles that the personal computer is going to go away as people convert to tablets and smart phones. Music CDs are decreasing as people stream or download music. DVDs sales may decrease with streaming and other services for watching movies and television shows.
I think that the future will be interesting. It is very possible that there is something waiting to be invented that will take the place of everything we currently use.

TSRT—Technical Services Round Table:
My Travels through Nebraska with the NLA Board
Heather Buckwalter

Not being from Nebraska, I have found attending the NLA Board meetings as the Chair of TSRT has been an eye opening experience for me. Although my husband and I have lived in Nebraska for close to twenty years, we have not explored a lot of Nebraska. I have thoroughly enjoyed visiting other libraries in Nebraska, but I am very grateful that Corinne Jacox, the chair of the Scholarships and Awards Committee, was my driving companion. otherwise I am not sure where I would have ended up.

As chair of TSRT, I have been able to visit new (to me) libraries and see parts of Nebraska that I had not seen before. It truly gave me a sense of how large and majestic the state is and we only went as far west as Kearney. Getting stuck at a train crossing in Yutan on my way to Wahoo to meet Corinne so we could go to Columbus was fun—well at least interesting. I had no idea where I was or if there was an alternative route I could take. Since many of the cars in front and behind me on the road stayed, I figured I probably did not have many choices. Thank goodness for technology which let me notify Corinne to tell her I was going to be late and why. Unfortunately, I missed the meeting in South Sioux City but thank you to Angela Kroeger, past TSRT chair, for stepping in as substitute. She reported back on the conference site and sent pictures so I could get a sense of the area. I am sorry I had to miss that meeting but it would have been a definite challenge to get there.

Meeting new people and hearing about the challenges in their libraries—some the same as in my own library, some different—has also benefited me. It has reinforced how large Nebraska is and how difficult it is to provide library services to such a large geographic area. I was glad the last board meeting of the year was in Papillion, close to home. I would encourage other members of TSRT to run for Chair of the Round Table. I think the experience has been very educational and rewarding.

The Knee Bone’s Connected to the …
Toxicology Resources from the National Library of Medicine

Marty Magee

Have you ever had a patron inquire about environmental resources? What may be toxic in our geographic environment or even a home environment? What about lead in the soil? Which careers may have hazardous exposures? These are just a few of the questions you may receive since our lives are filled with chemical exposures. How can you learn more? Well, the National Library of Medicine provides a host of free resources for just these purposes through its Environmental Health and Toxicology Portal, which can be viewed here: http://sis.nlm.nih.gov/enviro.html

Take a look at just a few of the resources available here.

This is a database of more than 900 drugs and other chemicals to which breastfeeding mothers may be exposed. For example, a young mother may wish to know if she can take aspirin while breastfeeding. By simply doing a search on aspirin, she can find that it is “best avoided during breastfeeding.”

This is an occupational toxicology database that links job tasks to occupational diseases and their symptoms. Want to know more, for example, about risks to hairdressers or child care workers? More than you want to know.

Provides a wide range of information on hazardous substances, including substance identification support, physical characteristics, human health information, and containment and suppression advice. How about recommending this to the emergency responders in your city? It’s easily downloadable to a mobile device.

A Geographic Information System that uses maps of the United States to help users visually explore Toxic Release Inventory (TRI) on more than 650 toxic chemicals. Is your community noted on this map? Also available is information on the Superfund program, part of a federal government’s effort to clean up land in the U.S. that has been contaminated by hazardous waste.

Disaster Information Management Research Center (DIMRC): http://disaster.nlm.nih.gov/

Health information resources and informatics research related to disasters of natural, accidental, or deliberate design. Learn what you should have on hand in your home for emergency preparedness.

This database provides human health effects information on more than 12,000 brand-name consumer products from landscape and yard to personal care to pesticides to pet care. Find the chemical make-up (maybe you have an allergy!), check for manufacturers, learn about first aid and how to dispose of a product safely. For a real challenge, find what ingredient is in acne scrub and toilet bowl cleaner!

An interactive guide to commonly encountered toxic substances and environmental health risks. Tox Town is highly interactive, with graphics, animation, and sound to add interest to learning about connections between chemicals, the environment, and the public's health. For example, in the Farm location, you can click on the cat and hear the cat meow and then explore information on pets. This resource is recommended for high school and college students, educators, and the concerned public.

And if this isn’t enough, try this for lots more databases!

Book Bites: Book Reviews (and More!)

The Public Library: A Photographic Essay by Robert Dawson (Photographer), Ann Patchett (Afterword), Bill Moyers (Foreword)
Princeton Architectural Press, 2014
Hardcover, $35.00, ISBN 978-1-6168-9217-3

This gorgeous representation of America’s public libraries is both inspiring and heartbreaking with haunting photographs of closed and vandalized libraries, such as the one that sits at Heartland Four Corners, Vermont, juxtaposed to the bright and geometrical shape of the Central Library in Seattle, Washington. Robert Dawson takes readers on a library tour throughout the states, revealing the transformational path of public libraries in America. Photographs are supplemented with essays by Bill Moyers and Ann Patchett, along with reflections by Isaac Asimov, Barbara Kingsolver, Anne Lamott, Philip Levine, Dr. Seuss, Charles Simic, Amy Tan, E. B. White, and others. This is an engaging, succinct read for library lovers and workers alike, perfect for sitting on the reading table as well as on the shelf. Give your patrons an insight to the future of the public library and the solemn decline of its ancestors.

The Master Switch: The Rise and Fall of Information Empires by Tim Wu
Vintage, 2011
Softcover, $15.95, ISBN 978-0-3073-9099-8

Tim Wu has written an engrossing history of the information industry. The Master Switch guides the reader through the origins of information innovation and control to our current era “on the cloud”. Observations rife with both wit and humor make this an easy read for both the technology savvy and relative newbie.

Libraries have historically attempted to provide equality of information access in a world where that access may be rigidly controlled. Wu has provided us with an engaging book which gives a behind the scenes look into the difficulty of providing information access for free. Given the current question of the transition from an open to a closed Internet both patrons and librarians would benefit from the knowledge offered in this book. Librarians especially should consider it; we are often on the front lines explaining technology issues to the public.

West of Last Chance by Kent Haruf (Author) and Peter Brown (Photographer)
W. W. Norton & Company, 2008
Hardcover, $49.95, ISBN 978-0-3930-6572-3

This unique collaboration between celebrated photographer Peter Brown and award-winning author Kent Haruf presents a visual and verbal dialogue of short prose and large-format color images that bring to life the hauntingly barren yet beautiful high plains, from West Texas north to the Dakotas, and the people who live there. After being awarded the Dorothea Lange-Paul Taylor Prize by the Center for Documentary Studies at Duke University for this project in 2005, the collaborative artists went on to publish this book and headline an exhibit at the Museum of Nebraska Art in Kearney, Nebraska, during the 2013 Annual Nebraska Library Association Conference. Appreciated by rural and suburban plains readers, photograph enthusiasts, history buffs, and poetry loves alike, your patrons will thank you.

A native of both Iowa and Nebraska, Ted Kooser was selected as Poet Laureate Consultant in Poetry to the Library of Congress in 2004 and 2005. He received the Pulitzer Prize in Poetry in 2005 for his book entitled, Delights & Shadows, and was the first recipient of the University of Nebraska Presidential Professorship. Kooser lives with his wife, Kathleen Rutledge, at their secluded farmstead in the “Bohemian Alps” near Garland, Nebraska. This photograph was taken inside Kooser’s study, a converted potting shed surrounded by foliage. The photographer, Charles W. Guildner, donated print #2 of 45 to the Museum of Nebraska Art in Kearney, Nebraska. Upon his donation, Guildner writes, “I have chosen the enclosed image as expressing best what I saw and learned to know of Mr. Kooser during my time with him.”
