DEAN’S MESSAGE

I am writing this message on a cold February day after an exciting weekend for the College of Law and our students. Our client counseling team won the regional competition and is on its way to nationals, again, for the fourth time in the last five years. Our mediation team placed second in an International Mediation Competition. Also during this academic year, we have sent teams to the Manfred Lochs Space Law North American Regional Moot Court Competition (where our students placed third), and students have competed in intraschool moot court competitions. And to top it off, today, the students in the Equal Justice Society organized the first faculty/staff chili cook-off, and over the lunch hour, raised $1000 for our Nebraska Public Interest Law Fund, which provides stipends to students working for non-profit and public interest law organizations over the summer.

“We are now here in 2015. You may recall that several years ago, I set as a goal that we have 15 percent of alumni participation in our annual fund by 2015. We are closer but not yet there. Your gift, no matter how small, will be understood by the Law College community as a signal of support for this small but magnificent law school.”

And speaking of football, I must report an event that fits into the only-in-Nebraska category. Recently, Athletic Director Shawn Eichorst invited the academic deans at UNL to lunch with the new football coach, Mike Riley. Over lunch at the training table, the deans were invited to tell the coach about what we do. Coach Riley was genuinely interested and articulate about the fact that the education and training of all student athletes is a joint effort and responsibility. Although the Law College typically does not see current student athletes in our classes, Coach Riley did agree to help recruit for us!

Our curriculum and programs evolve and improve as we continue to review them to ensure that they remain vibrant and relevant in the current environment in which many aspects of legal education and legal practice are being questioned. But there are some oldies but goodies in which we remain invested, in addition to the core classes that make up our broad-based curriculum. One of those is the world-renown Law-Psychology Program, which celebrates its 40th anniversary this year. You will read about that program in this edition of the Transcript.

I will end with an observation and a plea. We are now here in 2015. You may recall that several years ago, I set as a goal that we have 15 percent of alumni participation in our annual fund by 2015. We are closer but not yet there. Reaching this goal, even with small gifts, would provide a boost to our annual fund, which we need more and more as we continue to feel the pressure of using scholarships as a recruiting tool as the national pool of law school applicants continues to shrink. Perhaps more importantly, your gift, no matter how small, will be understood by the Law College community as a signal of support for this small but magnificent law school. Thank you for considering a gift, particularly if you have never made one.

As always, stay in touch and contact me anytime.

Susan Poser

Dean and Richard & Catherine Schmoker Professor of Law
Teaching was always in the cards for Professor John Lenich, just not quite in the manner he originally planned. Lenich grew up in Chicago and attended the University of Illinois where he earned his undergraduate bachelor’s degree in arts with a major in history. Graduating in 1977 with honors and distinction, Lenich intended to teach high school history, but a saturated job market prompted him to follow a different path and apply to law school. He earned his J.D. summa cum laude in 1980 from Northwestern University School of Law. Upon his graduation, Lenich practiced law with the Los Angeles firm Melveny & Meyers where he specialized in sports antitrust litigation. He joined the Nebraska Law faculty in 1984, where he teaches Civil Procedure, Appellate Advocacy and Antitrust.

The decision to make the leap from the practice of law to teaching law was not easy. “I wasn’t sure what I wanted to do, but the firm told me I was welcome to come back if it wasn’t the right fit. Nebraska was hiring in areas that interested me, so I decided to give it a chance, and here I am some 30 years later,” said Lenich.

When asked what he enjoys teaching the most, Lenich does not hesitate: Civil Procedure. “It’s fun because it’s a first-year class with new students who are eager to learn the law,” he said. “I work to bring this subject alive for students and hopefully help change what could otherwise be a boring subject and make it more exciting to study.” He understands the importance of grasping the rules and processes of civil procedure and works hard to make sure his students leave his class with a great understanding of the basics.

Lenich’s own law school experience with Civil Procedure affected his goals in teaching the material. “It was probably one of my least favorite classes throughout law school, and if you told me then that I would be spending almost 30 years teaching the subject I would have never believed it,” Lenich said. “In my Civil Procedure class we talked about some theories and the history of civil procedure but never really learned the basics.”
“Shortly after starting at the firm, somebody called and wanted me to change the venue on a case, and I didn't even know what a venue was let alone how to change it, so I wanted to make sure my students weren't put in that same situation.”

Though he greatly enjoys being a professor of law, Lenich admits that teaching is not without its challenges. “One of hardest things I have discovered over the course of my teaching career is that the longer you teach and as you become more knowledgeable on your subject area you have to be increasingly more careful with your teaching methods and remember that the students don't have your expertise and you have to find ways to explain the material so they can best understand.” For Lenich, keeping the energy going in class even when students are not as enthusiastic can also be a challenge. “One of the difficulties teachers have to struggle with is finding ways to keep students engaged.”

Lenich is active within the academic and legal communities in a variety of ways. In addition to being an active member of the Lincoln Bar Association, Lenich presents at continuing legal education (CLE) programs. “I really enjoy working with the judges and attorneys at CLEs because with their level of sophistication of the law, we can go more in depth into the particular focus areas within the law and discuss newer facets that are developing in that area.”

Lenich coached the College of Law’s moot court teams from 1988 until 2009 and mentioned his joy in being able to work with small groups of law students as they enhanced their written and oral advocacy skills. He also worked with the Civil Clinic at the Law College for several years and attempts to take a pro-bono case every few years to stay in touch with the practice side of the law.

When he is not busy at the Law College, Lenich enjoys bicycling, going to the gym and most of all traveling – especially if that travel takes him to Chicago for a White Sox game! Lenich also appreciates when his travel opportunities allow him to catch up with former students and see how their careers have developed.

Lenich shares some advice for students, in particular those just graduating or young in their careers, “Stay open to where opportunities take you and don't get too stuck on a particular path that you shy away from new chances and challenges.

“I never expected to be a professor at a law school, but it has led to a long career at the job I love.”
Faculty Notes

Jack M. Beard
Assistant Professor of Law

Professor Jack Beard presented a paper, “Soft Law as an Impediment to the Regulation of Space Activities with Military Implications: A View from the U.S. Congress,” at the 65th International Astronautical Congress in Toronto, Canada. He also made a presentation and moderated a panel, “Nuclear Non-proliferation and Disarmament: U.S. Policy and International Law,” at the Annual Meeting (the International Law Weekend) of the American Branch of the International Law Association in New York City.

Eric Berger
Associate Professor of Law

Professor Eric Berger published his article, “Lethal Injection Secrecy and Eighth Amendment Due Process” at 55 Boston College Law Review 1367. He also presented this piece at faculty workshops at the Drake University Law School in Des Moines, Iowa, and at home at the Law College.

Berger presented other scholarship at various law schools and conferences around the country. He presented a work in progress entitled “The World According to the Court” at the Fifth Annual Loyola Constitutional Law Colloquium in Chicago and at the Wisconsin Discussion Group on Constitutionalism in Madison. He also presented his paper, “The Rhetoric of Constitutional Absolutism,” at a faculty workshop at UCLA School of Law in Los Angeles. Berger also participated in the University of Richmond Law Review Allen Chair Symposium on “Lethal Injection, Politics, and the Future of the Death Penalty,” where he presented a new work entitled “The Executioners’ Dilemmas.” Finally, Berger discussed the Rehnquist Court’s federalism decisions on a panel at the William H. Rehnquist Center on the Constitutional Structures of Government Conference on “The Rehnquist Court: Ten Years Later,” hosted by the University of Arizona James E. Rogers College of Law in Tucson.

Berger received the Student Bar Association’s 2014-15 award for Professor of the Year. He was selected for the award by the members of the second and third year classes. He also serves as a faculty advisor to the Community Legal Education Project (CLEP). CLEP this year expanded its reach by teaching Constitution Day lessons in every eighth grade classroom in Lincoln. Berger also serves as the faculty advisor to the Law College’s chapter of the American Constitution Society.
Kristen M. Blankley
Assistant Professor of Law

Assistant Professor Kristen Blankley was named the chair of the ABA Section of Dispute Resolution Task Force on Access to Justice. This task force is part of a larger initiative by the ABA looking at access to justice issues. Blankley is also a new member of the American Bar Foundation, an honor bestowed on less than one percent of the lawyers from each state. She was also part of a speaker exchange program at South Dakota University Law School, where she presented her paper, “A Uniform Theory of Jurisdiction under the Federal Arbitration Act.” This spring, Blankley coached two teams of students in the InterNational Academy of Dispute Resolution International Law School Mediation Championship Competition.

Brian H. Bornstein
Professor of Psychology, Courtesy Professor of Law and Director of Law-Psychology Program

Professor Brian Bornstein was named director of the UNL Law-Psychology Program in January 2015. He was invited to give talks at the Cornell Law School on “Law Student Well-being: An Empirical Investigation,” the Cornell Human Development Department on “Juror Perceptions of Identification Witnesses” and the University of Alabama-Huntsville Psychology Department on “Eyewitness Memory Myths.” He recently published two edited volumes: Justice, Conflict and Wellbeing: Multidisciplinary Perspectives (with Wiener) and Beliefs and Expectancies in Legal Decision Making (with McAuliff). He has two other edited books forthcoming, on Motivating Cooperation and Compliance with Authority: The Role of Institutional Trust (with Tomkins) and The Witness Stand and Lawrence S. Wrightsman, Jr. (with Willis-Esqued). Bornstein also has several journal articles recently published or in press.

Eve M. Brank
Associate Professor of Psychology, Courtesy Professor of Law

Professor Eve Brank, with Lindsey Wylie, ’13, Josh Haby (MLS), Shaina Bergt and Professor Brian Bornstein, has a forthcoming article in Psychology, Crime and Law. The article addresses age and lineup type differences for the own-race bias in eyewitnesses. With Lori Hoetger, ’14, and 2L Kate Hazen, Brank published an article about sibling bullying in the Journal of Family Violence. The research was featured on several online news sources including NBCNews.com.
Marcia Dority Baker
Assistant Professor of Law Library and Access Services Librarian

Professor Marcia Dority Baker is a guest blogger for the AALL Spectrum blog during the 2014-2015 academic year. This winter she presented programs on Makerspaces in the library, finding free legal information online and digital assets. Dority Baker co-authored with Professor Stefanie Pearlman “7 Tips for an Efficient Faculty Bibliography: How to Tackle Faculty Bibliography Challenges with (Relative) Ease,” which was published in the AALL Spectrum (November 2014).

Justin (Gus) Hurwitz
Assistant Professor of Law

Professor Gus Hurwitz’s recent work has focused extensively on matters before the Federal Communications Commission, alongside other issues related to law and technology. In September, he co-organized a three-day workshop with the FCC and American Enterprise Institute. In October, he was invited to the FCC to speak at the FCC’s Roundtable on “Internet Openness and the Law.” In December, he cohosted the first in a series of Junior Faculty Law & Technology workshops. He is also advising Law College’s new student organization for students interested in Space, Cyber and Telecommunications Law and spoke at its inaugural event on cyberbullying and online harassment.

Hurwitz’s most recent article, “Data Security and the FTC’s UnCommon Law,” has been accepted for publication in the Iowa Law Review. His other recent publications include a symposium article on Network Neutrality in the Michigan State Law Review, a chapter on efforts in the United States to repurpose spectrum allocated to satellite operations for terrestrial use and a number of shorter articles critiquing the FCC’s approach to Internet-related regulation. He has presented his recent work at events organized by Berkeley Law School, Michigan State University School of Law, University of Pennsylvania, the FCC, the annual Telecommunications Policy Research Policy Conference and the Advisory Committee to the Congressional Internet Caucus.

John P. Lenich
Ross McCollum Professor of Law

Professor John Lenich received the Student Bar Association’s 2014-15 award 1L Professor of the Year. He was selected for the award by the members of the first-year class. Lenich spoke to the Nebraska Chapter of the Association of Records Managers and Administrators about the 2015 amendments to the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, which seek to narrow the scope of discovery and to create a uniform standard for the imposition of sanctions for the loss of electronically stored information. He also wrote an article on the federal venue statutes, “A Simple Question That Isn’t So Simple: Where Do Entities Reside for Purposes of the Federal Venue Statutes?” Mississippi Law Journal 253. The article explores the conflict between the two sections of the federal venue statutes that govern the residence of incorporated and unincorporated entities and explains how the statutes can be interpreted to eliminate the conflict. The article also explores some other venue-related issues that have divided the federal courts and suggests how those issues should be resolved.

Faculty Notes

Colleen E. Medill
Robert and Joanne Berkshire Family Professor of Law

Professor Colleen Medill has been elected a fellow of the American College of Employee Benefits Counsel in recognition of her sustained scholarly contributions and public education efforts in the field of employee benefits law for the past 22 years. She is the first fellow ever elected from the State of Nebraska. The ACEBC was established in 2000 to recognize the nation’s leading experts in employee benefits law. Election as a fellow is the highest form of professional recognition in the employee benefits law field. During the summer, Medill testified before the Department of Labor’s ERISA Advisory Council on the outsourcing employee benefit plan services and related policy implications. The United States Department of Labor released the Council’s final report in February 2015, which emphasizes Medill’s testimony regarding the lack of guidance from the Department of Labor and the federal courts in key areas of the law of ERISA co-fiduciary responsibilities and related liabilities. The final report is available at http://www.dol.gov/ebsa/publications/2014ACreport3.html. Medill serves as the faculty advisor for law students who are pursuing a program of concentrated study in Human Resources Law.

Richard E. Moberly
Associate Dean and Professor of Law

Professor Richard Moberly moderated a panel on “Developments and Trends in SOX and Dodd-Frank Whistleblower Litigation” at the Eighth Annual Meeting of American Bar Association Labor and Employment Law Section in Los Angles, California. He also presented a CLE for the McGrath North Speaker Series on “Whistleblowing and Ethics” in Omaha. He has appeared in the national media as an expert commentator on a variety of whistleblower issues, including stories with USA Today, the Wall Street Journal, and on “AirTalk with Larry Mantle,” a news show on KPCC, the National Public Radio station in Los Angeles.
Stefanie S. Pearlman
Professor of Law Library and Reference Librarian

Professor Stefanie Pearlman co-authored with Professor Marcia Dority Baker, “7 Tips for an Efficient Faculty Bibliography: How to Tackle Faculty Bibliography Challenges with (Relative) Ease.” It was published in 19 AALL Spectrum 23 (November 2014).

Susan Poser
Dean and Richard C. & Catherine Schmoker Professor of Law

Dean Susan Poser was recently appointed by the current president of the Association of American Law Schools to serve as chair of the AALS Membership Review Committee. This committee reviews law schools on behalf of the AALS for new membership, membership renewal and major change in organization. Last spring, she chaired the ABA New Law Deans Workshop, and more recently, she moderated a panel at the ABA Law Deans meeting about post-graduate training for lawyers. Poser’s travels over the past six months have taken her to Boston, New York, Washington, D.C., Scottsdale, Phoenix, Dallas, Los Angeles, Denver, North Platte and Kearney to visit Law College alumni. In March, Poser moderated a debate at the Lied Center for Performing Arts about carbon emissions for the Wilson Dialogue of the E.N. Thompson Forum on World Issues at UNL.

Josephine R. Potuto
Richard H. Larson Professor of Constitutional Law

Professor Josephine (Jo) Potuto presented at a session of Chicago Ideas Week, “The Playbook Has Changed.” She shared the podium with Ted Leonsis, owner of the Washington Capitals, Wizards and Mystics, as well as the Washington, D.C., Verizon Center; Rich Horrow, host of the Bloomberg Sportsfolio TV show; and Ronnie Lott, former USC and NFL All-Pro and Hall of Famer. Potuto moderated two panels and presented at the annual symposium hosted by the National Sports Law Institute at Marquette University Law School in Milwaukee, Wisconsin. Potuto also presented at the closing plenary session in Orlando of the Association of Public and Land Grant Universities, as well as at a symposium sponsored by the Elon Law Review. She also was interviewed for a Winthrop Intelligence Google Hangouts Program.
Professor Kevin Ruser returned to Kosovo for a final time to work on the Kosovo Legal Profession Project being run by the National Center for State Courts as a result of a grant it received from the United States Agency for International Development. The project ended March 31, 2015. During his week there, Ruser engaged in the following activities: (1) He taught a class on Legal Writing and Research to law students at Iliria College in Pristina. The class was taught each morning for a week for a total of 15 hours. Eight students participated and received certificates of completion at the end of the class. (2) He had a meeting with all of the Master-level clinical professors at the University of Pristina Law Faculty (UPLF) to talk about their clinical courses and syllabi. (3) He led a workshop at the UPLF Institute of Legal Research to finalize a draft of a legal style and citation manual for use at the UPLF. (4) He gave a three-hour presentation on academic research and writing to Masters and Ph.D. candidates at the UPLF. (5) He participated in a ceremony at Iliria College during which a MOU between the University of Nebraska and Iliria College was signed. (6) He helped judge a mock arbitration competition among students at Iliria College.

Professor Jessica Shoemaker presented her paper, “Emulsified Property,” at the Central Law Schools Association Annual Meeting in Baton Rouge and the Washington University Junior Faculty Workshop in St. Louis. She also wrote multiple posts as an invited guest blogger on Land Use Prof Blog. Shoemaker moderated a panel on “Urban Growth – Rural Resilience” for the Lower Platte River Corridor Alliance’s Biannual Summit and facilitated a plenary session at that same event using a land use planning simulation tool she led an interdisciplinary group to develop. Shoemaker is also part of an international research team that recently won a Knowledge Exchange Opportunities Grant from the United Kingdom’s Economic Social Resource Council to further develop this and other related tools for public participation in land use planning and development. She will be traveling to the United Kingdom this spring to collaborate further on this project and to present her work. She continues to work closely with the University’s Rural Future Institute and the Law College’s growing Equal Justice Society student group. She is the proud winner of EJS’s prestigious Golden Ladle Award from the group’s first-annual Faculty Chili Cook-off.
Adam Thimmesch
Assistant Professor of Law

Professor Adam Thimmesch participated in a Vanderbilt Law Review En Banc roundtable discussion of a current-term Supreme Court case concerning states’ taxing powers under the U.S. Constitution. Thimmesch’s contribution, “Comptroller v. Wynne and the Futile Search for Non-Discriminatory State Taxation,” cautions the Court against adopting a neutrality-based standard for purposes of its non-discrimination analysis and suggests alternative ways for the Court to decide the case. Thimmesch has also recently completed two articles addressing state use taxes. Together, the two pieces evaluate those taxes from new perspectives and propose significant changes to their design and enforcement. Thimmesch presented a portion of this research to Nebraska Law students at a S.T.I.R. talk this fall.

Frans von der Dunk
Harvey & Susan Perlman Alumni/Othmer Professor of Space Law

Dr. Frans von der Dunk was one of the hundred-plus signatories of the “100x Asteroid Declaration,” a declaration signed by many astronauts, cosmonauts, Nobel-prize winners and famous artists to call for the space agencies to step up their efforts in searching and finding asteroids that might in the future present a serious risk of collision with earth. The Declaration was presented by two simultaneous press conferences on December 3, 2014, in London by the British Astronomer Royal, Lord Martin Rees and astrophysicist (and lead guitarist with Queen) Brian May, and in San Francisco by astronauts Rusty Schweickart, Ed Lu and Tom Jones.

Von der Dunk has published Handbook of Space Law. Von der Dunk wrote six of the book’s 19 chapters. The other 13 were provided by authors renowned worldwide in their respective specializations. The book covers a broad gamut of space law, past, present and future. It includes a Preface by Rusty Schweickart, a U.S. astronaut who flew on Apollo 9 and since then has repeatedly worked with von der Dunk on legal issues pertinent to space activities.

Von der Dunk addressed an ABA Webinar online with a talk entitled “Can Aviation Serve as a Model for Space Law: A Practical Approach” in which he introduced the Law College’s LL.M. program on Space, Cyber and Telecommunications Law before addressing several key issues regarding the question phrased by the title of the talk. The Webinar was organized and chaired by Giugi Carminati, alumnae of Nebraska Law’s LL.M. program and currently enrolled in the J.S.D. program, where she is writing a dissertation on space law.

Von der Dunk spoke on the topic of jurisdiction in outer space under the heading of “From Space Tourists to Unruly Passengers? The US Struggle with ‘On-Orbit Jurisdiction,’” at the annual International Astronautical Congress’ Colloquium on the Law of Outer Space in Toronto, Canada. He also prepared a White Paper addressing the same issue more in depth for the Nebraska Law’s own annual space law conference in Washington, D.C.

Remotely, von der Dunk gave a lecture on international space treaties and national space law for a class at the University of Houston Law Center, as well as a presentation on the role of the law in the active search for extra-terrestrial intelligence to the SETI Workshop held in Mountain View, California.

Finally, von der Dunk provided support to a professional study benchmarking national space laws for the Japanese Ministry of Economy, Trade and Industry in view of the plans of the Japanese government to develop a national space law for Japan. The main contractor for the study was Euroconsult, a leading European consulting company on matters of space policy, economics and commerce.

Steven L. Willborn
Judge Harry A. Spencer Professor of Law

Professor Steve Willborn published “College Athletes as Employees: An Overflowing Quiver,” 69 Miami Law Review 65. He was also co-editor, with Alan Neal of Warwick University, UK, of the 2013 Yearbook of Comparative Labour Law Scholarship published by Lancaster House, Toronto, Canada. Willborn spoke on “College Athletes as Employees” at Elon University in Greensboro, North Carolina, and on “Notice, Consent and Non-Consent: Employee Privacy in the Restatement” at a symposium on the Restatement of Employment Law at the Cornell Law School in Ithaca, New York. Willborn also gave one of the opening addresses at the XI European Regional Congress of the International Society for Labor and Social Security Law in Dublin, Ireland.
Sandra B. Zellmer
Robert B. Daugherty Professor of Law

Professor Sandi Zellmer was a visiting scholar-in-residence at the University of Colorado School of Law in Boulder while on sabbatical during Fall 2014, and she’s the visiting distinguished professor of law at Pepperdine University School of Law in Malibu, California, during Spring 2015. She delivered a number of presentations recently: “Unnatural Disasters: How Law Hurts, How Law Can Help,” at Stanford University, Vermont Law School and the University of Minnesota; “Water Security and Peacebuilding,” at the U.N. Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR) Conference on Environmental Governance at Yale University; “Legal Landscape: Managing Floodplains and Restoring Salmon,” for the Oregon Law Institute and Columbia River Intertribal Fish Commission; and “Wilderness Water Rights,” at Utah’s Stegner Law Center Conference on “The Wilderness Act at 50.” Zellmer and co-author Adell Amos (Oregon) are finishing the newest edition of the Water Law Nutshell, to be published by West in 2015. Along with co-author Jan Laitos (Denver), she has finished a Hornbook on Natural Resources Law, also slated for publication by West in 2015.

Professor Colleen Medill was elected a fellow of the American College of Employee Benefits Counsel in recognition of her outstanding performance in the field. Medill is the first fellow from the state of Nebraska and was inducted during the counsel’s 15th annual ceremony in Washington, D.C., on October 25, 2014.

The American College of Employee Benefits Counsel (ACEBC) was established in 2000 to recognize the nation’s leading experts in the field of employee benefits law. Selection is the highest form of professional recognition in the employee benefits law field. It is based on proof of a sustained commitment to the development and pursuit of public awareness and a deep understanding of the law of employee benefits demonstrated by activities such as writing, speaking, participating in public policy analysis, public education or public service for at least 20 years.

Medill graduated first in her law school class from the University of Kansas School of Law. Following graduation, Medill served as a law clerk to the Honorable Deanell Reece Tacha on the United States Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit. She then went on to practice law in Kansas City, Missouri, for seven years focusing on federal employee benefits law and banking. From 1997-2005, Medill was a faculty member at the University of Tennessee College of Law. She then joined the faculty at Nebraska Law.

At the College of Law, Medill teaches classes in Property, Real Estate Transactions and Employee Benefits Law. Medill’s textbook, Introduction to Employee Benefits Law: Policy and Practice (West Academic, 4th edition 2014), is being used in more than 40 law schools in the United States. She is also the author of numerous law review articles on employee benefits topics and is a recurring speaker at national conferences on employee benefits law.
Bornstein Named Director of Law-Psychology Program

By Loguen Blazek, '16

Dr. Brian Bornstein, professor of psychology and law, has been named the new director of the University of Nebraska-Lincoln’s Law-Psychology Dual Degree Program by the dean of the College of Arts and Sciences Joseph S. Francisco. “I appreciate that Professor Bornstein has agreed to return early from his current faculty leave to assume this important role in the program,” said Francisco.

Bornstein is in his 15th year at UNL and previously served as associate director of the program. His research accomplishments include 12 books, over 140 articles and book chapters and a strong record of extramural grant funding. Bornstein’s research and teaching contributions have been recognized with the College of Arts & Sciences Outstanding Research and Creative Achievement Award in 2013 and the American Psychology-Law Society Outstanding Teaching and Mentoring Award in 2011.

Bornstein’s research efforts focus primarily on how juries, especially in civil cases, make decisions and on the reliability of eyewitness memory. Additional areas of focus are in applying decision-making principles to everyday judgment tasks, as in medical decision-making and distributive and procedural justice. He teaches courses on human memory, psychology and law, decision-making and the history of psychology at the graduate and undergraduate levels.

“Previous directors of the UNL Law-Psychology Program have been outstanding scholars and leaders, and I am honored and humbled to be selected to join that group.”

The Law-Psychology Program is a collaboration between UNL’s Department of Psychology and the College of Law. Founded in 1974, it is the country’s oldest and most prestigious program of its kind. In October 2014, the program celebrated its 40th anniversary with a conference that, in part, recognized past directors, professors Bruce Sales, Gary Melton, Steve Penrod and Rich Wiener. Francisco thanked Bornstein’s predecessor for his work in this role, “We appreciate [Wiener’s] many years of service as the program director and look forward to his continued engagement in the Law-Psychology program.” Weiner resigned as director to continue his teaching and research work with the program and the Psychology Department.

Bornstein, too, acknowledged the work of Wiener and past directors. “Previous directors of the UNL Law-Psychology Program have been outstanding scholars and leaders, and I am honored and humbled to be selected to join that group. The program has an impressive history and an exciting future, thanks in large part to the support it receives from the College of Law, the Department of Psychology and throughout UNL. I look forward to working with colleagues and students at the Law College as we continue to build on our past successes.”

Dean Susan Poser expressed her excitement in the new appointment, “Dr. Bornstein is an outstanding and prolific scholar and researcher whose work is known nationally and internationally. As a longtime faculty member and associate director, he has made significant contributions to the program already. I am looking forward to working with him to continue to enhance the work and stature of the Law-Psychology Program.”
Chief Justice Roberts Visits College: ‘Court Not Part of Political Process’

The Honorable John G. Roberts, Jr., chief justice of the United States Supreme Court, visited the College of Law on Friday, September 19, 2014, as the honored guest of the Roman L. Hruska Institute for the Administration of Justice. During his visit, Roberts participated in a question and answer session with the honorable William Jay Riley, chief judge of the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit, before a capacity audience in Hamann Auditorium. In addition to that audience, several members of the Law College community and the public viewed the event over monitors in spillover rooms in the building, and students across the state viewed it streaming online.

The chief justice of the United States, John G. Roberts, Jr., was born in Buffalo, New York, on January 2, 1955. He was married in 1996 to Jane Sullivan, and they have two children. The chief justice received his A.B. from Harvard College in 1976 and his J.D. from Harvard Law School in 1979. After clerking for Associate Justice William Rehnquist of the United States Supreme Court in 1980, Roberts went on to be special assistant to the attorney general, U.S. Department of Justice, from 1981-1982. From there he went to work as associate counsel to President Ronald Reagan in the White House Counsel’s Office during 1982-86. Between 1989 and 1993, Roberts was principal deputy solicitor general of the U.S. Department of Justice. He then practiced law in Washington, D.C., until he was appointed to the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit in 2003. President George W. Bush nominated Roberts as chief justice of the United States Supreme Court, and he took his seat September 29, 2005.

The program began with Chief Justice Roberts thanking everybody for coming and expressing his excitement to be visiting Nebraska and speaking to students. Opening with a joke, Roberts responded to a question about how his undergraduate degree in history influences his work saying, “I went to law school because I couldn't get a job in history.” Roberts went on to answer questions about the job of the chief justice, the role of the judiciary and, in particular, that of the Supreme Court of the United States, as well as some personal questions.

One of the main points Roberts emphasized was his view that the Supreme Court is not a political branch and that the justices work to decide questions based on the law and not along party lines. “We are not part of the political process; we don’t make decisions on political grounds,” said Roberts. The chief justice also expressed concern about how polarized the confirmation process has become and the growing public perception that the court is a political body. “It worries me we’ve reached a point where neither Justice Scalia nor Justice Ginsberg could survive confirmation if they went before the Senate today, and that’s not a good thing,” remarked Roberts. “We need to keep the partisan divide on the other side of First Street.”

When asked about the duties of the chief justice, Roberts discussed his view and experiences on the Supreme Court. The administrative aspects are his least favorite part of the job. Shortly after Roberts took his position as chief justice, he remembered being told about how cold it was in the building and realizing that the person mentioned this to him because it was now his job to take care of those types of tasks. “It was an adjustment getting used to the different duties of chief justice, but the role is even more than I imagined,” he said.

For instance, upon taking his seat, Roberts learned that one of his new duties was serving on the Smithsonian Board of Regents. The Smithsonian Institute was created by Congress in 1846 and the authority for the Institute was vested in a Board of Regents, which consists of the chief justice of the United States Supreme Court along with the vice president, three members of the United States Senate, three members of the United States House of Representatives and nine citizens. The Board of Regents meets at least four times a year and, according to the chief justice, provides him with a unique change of pace from his other responsibilities.

Among those responsibilities is assigning opinions to the other justices. Chief Justice Roberts discussed his goal to be fair in assigning those opinions stating, “I aim to give each justice a share of important cases and the ‘dogs.’”

When asked advice on opinion and legal writing, Roberts responded saying, “One of the best ways to learn is from previous judges by reading and analyzing good and bad opinions.” The chief justice himself said he learned a lot from the great opinion writing of Justice Friendly and Chief Justice Rehnquist. The chief justice also appealed to his audience and gave some advice to current and aspiring attorneys in regards to briefs and oral arguments before the Supreme Court. “Keep briefs short and concise,” instructed Roberts. He went on to advise attorneys giving oral argument before the Supreme Court to answer questions directly and concede upfront any negative viewpoints on their side of the case.

“We are not part of the political process; we don’t make decisions on political grounds.”

For Roberts, one of the most important parts of his role as chief justice is the diplomatic aspects of the job. He explained how visiting judges look to the United States and particularly the Supreme Court to help them develop the rule of law in their countries.

The conversation with Chief Justice Roberts came to an end with a few questions about Robert’s personal life. The chief justice expressed that one of the benefits of working on the Supreme Court is the flexibility over his schedule that it allows. When asked what he did for fun and in his free time, Roberts exclaimed, “I have two teenaged kids; I go to soccer games, hockey games and school plays.”

The chief justice ate lunch with students following his lecture at the College, addressed two Constitutional Law classes, and attended the Nebraska-Miami football game the next day.
Friday, September 19, 2014, was not your average day at the College of Law – and it was not just because the student body was considerably better dressed than a typical Friday. Instead, everyone was putting their best foot forward because of a very high profile speaker in the building, the Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court John G. Roberts, Jr.

As 2Ls, my classmates and I have become very familiar with the opinions of the U.S. Supreme Court through the many cases we are asked to read and analyze. The chief justice’s noontime lecture made the U.S. Supreme Court, its decisions and its justices, come to life. It took the law from the pages of our casebooks and transformed it into a human court of individuals who have the tough task of deciding the cases that come before them. The chief justice amicably addressed the 250+ spectators gathered in Hamann Auditorium that afternoon. His conversational tone and demeanor made his role in American law-making and history seem less formal and intimidating. That is, until you walked down the hallway and ran into a few U.S. Marshals.
During the public lecture, Chief Justice Roberts provided some great insight into the workings of the United States Supreme Court and an inside view into the tasks and concerns of the justices, as well as some great advice for aspiring attorneys.

While his lecture was insightful, the 2Ls benefited more from his visits to the Constitutional Law classes that took place following the lecture. This provided the Class of 2016 the rare opportunity to hear from Chief Justice Roberts in an intimate and extremely informal setting. In the more circumscribed atmosphere of the classroom, the chief justice responded more in-depth to questions and thoughts from students and the class was able to have a more casual conversation with the individual who currently holds the highest legal position in the country, making for a very exciting class period. While it was nerve-wracking experience, especially for those select individuals who happened to be called on by the chief justice, it was an exciting and beneficial day for the students at the College of Law and one they are not likely to soon forget.
In 1974, a newly hired assistant professor of psychology, Bruce Sales, JD, PhD, and a group of faculty from both the Department of Psychology and the College of Law led the way for the founding of a unique program at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln – a program focused on interdisciplinary training in psychology and law. This program established a way to fully integrate and dual-train students in both disciplines with a joint JD/PhD program that would go on to also include MA/JD and MLS/PhD students. It is no surprise that Nebraska Law is the home to such a longstanding program as it has a long history of supporting social science approaches to the law; indeed, one of the Law College’s first deans was Roscoe Pound, a well-known early advocate for applying behavioral science knowledge to legal questions.

In October, alumni, affiliates, faculty and current students gathered to celebrate the 40th anniversary of the program and look toward the future. The group first gathered at the Wick Alumni Center on Thursday, October 23, to welcome alumni back to Lincoln and focus on the program’s relationship with the Law College. Professor Alan Frank related a story about the faculty meeting during which Sales introduced the idea of the new program to the law faculty. Dean Susan Poser thanked the program for fostering the successful and long-standing relationship between the two disciplines and for its continued efforts toward establishing new dual-degree programs. Professor Bob Schopp was honored as being the faculty member who has served on the most dissertation committees for students in the program.

Chancellor Harvey Perlman, who, as a Law College faculty member, played an integral role in the founding of the Law-Psychology program, welcomed the group on Friday. Current faculty then moderated alumni and affiliate panel discussions that tackled such topics as the difficulty inherent in working with vulnerable populations, employment experiences outside of academia and empirical research within the psycholegal domain.

The panelists provided a review of their current research and employment and provided advice for current students. Even though they came from quite varied careers, the intersection and wide-reach of law-psychology was a consistent theme throughout the panels. Those working within psychology and academia described using their legal knowledge to shape and drive their research interests. Those working in more applied settings, like public service, cited their legal training as a means to better serve their clients and the public. In a similar fashion, those working within the legal field, for example, with law firms and as trial consultants, spoke to how their psychological background provides the opportunity to facilitate communication across legal situations.
Also on Friday, Professor Alan Tomkins moderated a panel of all four former program directors – Bruce Sales (program director 1974-1981), Gary Melton (1982-1993), Steve Penrod (1995-2001) and Rich Wiener (2002-2015). This session not only provided insight into their experiences as program directors, but it also provided direction for the program in the next decade and beyond.

Friday ended with a celebratory dinner at the Van Brunt Visitor’s Center that focused on the program’s relationship with the Psychology Department. Four undergraduate alumni from each of the program director eras spoke about the impact the Law-Psychology program had on them as undergraduate students at UNL. Richard Blunk, an undergraduate during Sales’ tenure who went on to become a successful attorney, announced the Bruce Sales Law-Psychology Program Excellence Fund as a way to honor the mentoring and influence Bruce Sales had on Richard’s life and career. Finally, on Saturday, the group celebrated at a tailgate before, during and after the Husker football win against Rutgers.
Civil Clinic 3Ls Boal, Odle Argue Before U.S. Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit

Micheal Boal, ’15, and Adam Odle, ’15, appeared before the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit in St. Paul, Minnesota, on October 9, 2014, to argue a bankruptcy appeal. Boal and Odle were students in the College’s Civil Clinic, and prepared for the argument with the help of Civil Clinic professors Kevin Ruser and Ryan Sullivan, and other members of the Lincoln legal community.

EClinic Tours Greater Nebraska

By Loguen Blazek, ’16

In an effort to expand the reach and benefit of the Law College’s Entrepreneurship Clinic, its students took part in a tour of greater Nebraska on August 4-5, 2014. Entitled the “Entrepreneurship Legal Clinic Rural Outreach Tour,” the trip covered Chadron, Scottsbluff and Broken Bow. Student-attorney participants John Cantril, Preston Peterson and Megan Rotherham made the journey in order to connect communities in central and western Nebraska to the Clinic and the services it provides. The events were free of charge. “A primary goal of this tour was to continue building a meaningful and sustainable network between the Clinic and attorneys, businesses and economic development stakeholders across the state that will create opportunities for collaboration and service to foster entrepreneurship in these communities,” said Brett Stohs, Cline Williams director of the Entrepreneurship Legal Clinic.

The tour also provided its students with the opportunity to build professional networks, learn about economic development efforts in the respective communities and promote the services they could provide.
On Wednesday, September 17, 2014, students from the College of Law lead more than 2,300 Lincoln Public Schools eighth-graders through a project to celebrate Constitution Day.

The project is part of the College’s Community Legal Education Project (CLEP), a student-run organization that focuses on community outreach. The effort included more than 60 volunteers who talked about the importance and history of the Constitution in eight Lincoln middle schools.

“This is the second year we have worked with Lincoln Public Schools on this Constitution Day project,” said Chris Schmidt, a second-year law student and event organizer. “The Constitution gets a bad rap for being this ancient and old document, but we try to get the students to realize it is alive and affecting us every day.”

To show how the Constitution remains active, Schmidt said the presentations involved current topics, including debates on the need for school uniforms and if freedom of speech applies to social media posts.

“We think the topic of getting in trouble for what you post online will be a good one to get the students’ blood going,” Schmidt said. “It’s going to be fun to show them what the Constitution says and how it even impacts the lives of 13 year olds.”

Law students posed the question: Should a school be able to discipline a student for making an inappropriate comment online even if it didn’t happen at school? Some classrooms said yes, some said no, but most agree that cyberbullying is a problem that needs to be addressed.

The College’s Community Legal Education Project provides law students with the opportunity to teach elementary and middle school students about the Bill of Rights, the Constitution and other legal issues. During the spring semester, law students go into local elementary classrooms once a week for six weeks to teach prepared lessons.
Summer is an important time for law students. For 1L students, summer is their first chance to gain some hands-on experience working in the legal field. While most students spent this time working for law firms or non-profit organizations in the United States and taking summer classes, Kiersten Haugen, currently a 2L, spent the summer in Montevideo, Uruguay, working for an international law firm.

Haugen really enjoys international law and knew it was a type of law she wanted to learn more about. “I became a student member of the International Bar Association (IBA), which is how I learned of and applied for the job in Uruguay,” said Haugen. The building where Haugen worked was a six story building with roughly 40-50 attorneys. “The setup of the firm was unique, and each floor of the building had its own specialty. It made for a great atmosphere in which people were very willing to help each other and work together.” According to Haugen, the newest attorneys worked on the top floor, which is where she was placed.

Working in a foreign country, Haugen had to adjust to many differences. “One of the biggest challenges was the language barrier,” said Haugen. “Even being fluent in Spanish, it still takes some practice, especially with the different dialects you have to get used to.” Haugen mentioned that one particular difficulty occurred when a meeting she attended was conducted in Portuguese instead of Spanish. “There were definitely struggles along the way working for the first time in a new environment; however, the new perspectives and experiences it gave me were well worth it.

“One of the best parts about my summer was all the interesting people I met while in Montevideo,” said Haugen. “It was really great talking to the new attorneys I was working with and learning what studying law was like in their country,” said Haugen. “In Uruguay, law is an undergraduate degree that takes five years, so it was fun comparing the different experiences they had as undergraduates versus law school here in America.” While in South America, Haugen was able to travel and even stayed with the U.S. ambassador’s family in Argentina.

For Haugen, the people she met and relationships she was able to develop were the best part. “Being able to meet so many people in the field I am interested in and network with them was invaluable. I still keep in touch with many of them today.”
“There were definitely struggles along the way working for the first time in a new environment; however, the new perspectives and experiences it gave me were well worth it.”

International law, though not the most common field of interest for students, is a growing area of the law. Haugen said that one of the things that drew her to the field was how it can show up in unexpected places. “While I was working in Uruguay this summer I had a client who was suing from Uruguay in a Florida court. This experience confirmed for me that there is a need for attorneys who understand the complexities of international law.”
Client Counseling Competition Names in Honor of Frank, Lawson

By Loguen Blazek, ’16

One of the most storied and successful extracurricular opportunities offered at the College of Law is the Client Counseling Competition, a program guided by professors Alan Frank and Craig Lawson. Frank began the College’s participation in the ABA-sponsored national Client Counseling Competition in the spring semester of 1975, the year the College won its first Client Counseling national championship. He was joined by Lawson four years later, and both have been involved with the competition ever since. To honor their service and their success as coaches and to mark the occasion of Frank’s retirement, the Nebraska Law faculty honored the duo by naming the Law College’s Client Counseling Competition The Alan Frank and Craig Lawson Client Counseling Competition.

To celebrate the naming, a lunch was held on September 27, 2014, at the Law College during Alumni Reunion Weekend. Previous client counseling participants were joined by numerous members of the College of Law faculty and administration and family and friends of Frank and Lawson at the event. The celebration consisted of a social hour with drinks and hors d’oeuvres giving guests an opportunity to mingle and catch up, followed by a lunch and program.

Dean Susan Poser welcomed everyone and thanked Frank and Lawson for their great work with the College’s Client Counseling teams and congratulated them on their teams’ impressive record over the 40 years they have been involved. She pointed out that, under their leadership, the College’s teams have won 14 regional championships, five national championships and one international championship. Last spring, the 2014 team of Rick Tast, ’15, and Katie Joseph, ’15, won the national and regional competitions and placed second at the international competition. In addition to the teams that competed regionally, nationally and internationally, Frank and Lawson have also worked with numerous other teams of students in intra-school competitions.

Frank and Lawson each spoke and expressed their gratitude for the recognition and shared some stories of their experiences with the competition over the years. Frank went on to say, “Craig and I are deeply honored to have the College’s Client Counseling Competition named after us. I can think of no retirement gift that would mean as much to me.”
To honor the service and success of Professor Alan Frank and Professor Craig Lawson and to mark the occasion of Frank’s retirement, the Nebraska Law faculty honored the duo by naming the Law College’s Client Counseling Competition The Alan Frank and Craig Lawson Client Counseling Competition.

“It has been a pleasure to be involved in the competition and to work with the skilled and hard-working students who that have made the College’s Client Counseling teams so successful in the competition over the years.”

A featured speaker at the program was Forrest S. (Woody) Mosten, a Los Angeles lawyer and mediator who has been president of the international competition – now called the Louis M. Brown and Forrest S. Mosten International Client Consultation Competition – for more than 25 years. He thanked Frank and Lawson for their years of involvement in and support for the Client Counseling Competition and provided the audience with a little history of the competition and its creator, the late Louis M. Brown, Mosten’s good friend and mentor. He concluded his remarks by delivering the official invitation to Dean Poser to have the Law College host the 2015 International Client Consultation Competition in Lincoln in April, a fitting final tribute to Nebraska Law’s noteworthy history of participation in the Client Counseling Competition.
College Celebrates December Commencement

Victoria Collier, '02, visited Nebraska Law on November 20 and 21, 2014, as part of the University of Nebraska–Lincoln’s Alumni Masters Week. While at the Law College, Collier lectured about her career as a leading elder law attorney and met with students in private sessions to discuss career opportunities and planning.

Alumni Masters Week is a program sponsored by the Nebraska Alumni Association, Scarlet Guard and the Chancellor’s Office. The event provides students with opportunities to learn from the expertise and knowledge of accomplished alumni. Collier and the other masters were on hand to celebrate the program’s 50th anniversary.

Collier’s large group lecture, entitled “How to Build Your Law Practice from the Ground Up: Lessons Learned,” gave students insight into Collier’s own experiences building a law practice. According to Collier, the three keys to success in sustaining a law practice are finding a niche area of the law that you love, distinguishing yourself from others and building referral relationships. For Collier, elder law and veterans benefits provided her those niche areas about which she was passionate. She has also distinguished herself as an expert in that field. “I authored several books on the areas I practice, which helps set me apart as an expert and gives potential clients confidence in my knowledge and expertise.”

During her lecture, Collier shared some of her personal history and life experiences with students and spoke about the lessons she learned along the way. After moving out of her parents’ house when she was 17, Collier worked several jobs including work as a nursing aid. “As a nursing aid, I developed a passion for working with the elderly, which later led to my focus in the area of elder law,” she said. Collier also spent six years in the U.S. Air Force during which time she was trained as a paralegal for the military. This military background led Collier to her other niche practice area, veterans benefits law.

Collier shared several ways students could prepare while still in law school for their future careers. Some tips included enrolling in a professional organization as a student member, applying for a research assistant in a field of interest and networking with students, professors and members of the community. “Because I knew I wanted to one day open my own firm, I also spent any free time I had reading biographies of successful people and entrepreneurs to help gain insight,” she said.
“A law career is often very stressful and time consuming so I consciously choose to create a work-life balance that is acceptable for me and my family."

Following through on the plans she made while at the Law College, Collier started her own firm in Decatur, Georgia, upon her graduation. She has found that one of the toughest aspects of owning her own firm is dealing with the business side of her practice. “It can be hard to remember that it’s not just the law aspect of a practice that matters but also all the administrative tasks that are necessary to keep the firm running.”

In addition to encouraging students to follow their passion, Collier’s advice touched on the need to have a business plan, the benefits of learning leadership skills in addition to legal expertise, marketing strategies and realizing that nobody will care like you do about your business or career. Collier also stressed the importance of blocking out time for family, friends, pets and fun every day. “A law career is often very stressful and time consuming so I consciously choose to create a work-life balance that is acceptable for me and my family,” she said.

Yeutter, Nebraska Ag Secretaries Honored with East Campus Statues

On a late-summer day when four former U.S. secretaries of agriculture from Nebraska, including Nebraska Law alumnus Clayton Yeutter, ’63, were honored in bronze on the University of Nebraska–Lincoln’s East Campus, Ronnie Green already was looking ahead to the need to make room for a fifth and sixth – who knows how many? – statues.

Green, Harlan vice chancellor of the University of Nebraska’s Institute of Agriculture and Natural Resources, led the dedication on September 20 of statues of Yeutter, J. Sterling Morton, Clifford Hardin and Mike Johanns.

Only Iowa claims more secretaries of agriculture, with five, but Green assured the crowd Nebraska isn’t done.

“When the next secretary of agriculture from Nebraska is appointed, we’ll start working on that next statue,” he said.

Yeutter’s statue is in the Jeanne Yeutter garden, while the other three are placed in an area bound by the East Union, Thompson Library and Filley Hall. With planned renovations to the library and the union, Green said, this Legacy Plaza will become a major focal point on East Campus, where the statues will serve to educate future generations of students about “these four distinguished Nebraskans who have served our country greatly.”

Green said the idea for the statues was born during the celebration two years ago of the 150th anniversary of the Morrill Act, which created the land-grant university system. Yeutter and Johanns were among four former ag secretaries who participated in a panel-discussion Heuermann Lecture that fall.

The statues, privately funded, were sculpted by Matthew Placzek of Omaha, who expressed his joy in getting to know the four men’s families over the last couple of years. “To me, to be a part of this wonderful campus is truly an honor,” Placzek said.

Yeutter and Johanns expressed appreciation. “I’ve been a Cornhusker all my life,” said Yeutter, a Dawson County native.

Johanns, a former governor and U.S. senator, said he too was honored.

“You can’t be a senator or governor and not have a very deep, passionate appreciation of what the University of Nebraska means to this state,” he said.
The celebration of the 40th anniversary of the University of Nebraska–Lincoln's Law-Psychology Program in October 2014 brought a number of former program directors and graduates of the program to Lincoln from across the county, many of whom served on panels or spoke as part of the celebration's program. Here are brief descriptions of what many of those graduates are doing now.

Directors

Bruce Sales (1974–1981), is the Virginia L. Roberts professor of criminal justice at Indiana University.

Gary Melton (1982–1993), is professor of pediatrics in the University of Colorado School of Medicine, professor of community and behavioral health in the Colorado School of Public Health, adjunct professor of psychology at the University of Colorado Springs and associate director for community development and social policy in the Kempe Center for Prevention and Treatment of Child Abuse and Neglect. For 30 years, he directed interdisciplinary centers and institutes (usually as founding director) at, successively, the University of Nebraska–Lincoln, the University of South Carolina and Clemson University.

Steven Penrod (1995–2001), is the distinguished professor of psychology at the John Jay College of Criminal Justice in New York City.

Richard Weiner, MLS ’89, (2002–2015), recently stepped down as director of the Law-Psychology Program at the University of Nebraska. He is continuing his association with the program as a professor of psychology.

Law College Alumni

Brian Bornstein, ’01 MLS, was recently named director of the Law-Psychology Dual Degree Program at the University of Nebraska–Lincoln. He has been with the program since 2000.

Eve Brank, ’00 JD, is an associate professor of psychology and courtesy professor of law with the UNL Law-Psychology Program.

Emily Campbell, ’91 JD, is the founder and managing member of the Campbell Law Firm in New York City. She is also an adjunct professor at New York Law School, where she teaches Advising Entrepreneurs, Drafting Contracts and Mental Disability Law and serves as a member of the advisory board for Nebraska Law’s Entrepreneurship Legal Clinic.

Keith Cruise, ’95 MLS, is an associate professor and co-director of the Clinical-Forensic Specialization in the Department of Psychology at Fordham University.

Eric Elbogen, ’00 MLS, is a forensic psychologist who conducts both clinical work and empirical research at the intersection of law and mental health services, with a particular focus on military veterans. He is currently a principal investigator of an NIMH funded R01 examining the effects of Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD) and Traumatic Brain Injury (TBI) on violence and aggression among Iraq/Afghanistan Veterans.

Patricia Falk, ’83 JD, is the Charles R. Emrick, Jr./Calfee, Halter & Griswold endowed professor of law at the Cleveland-Marshall College of Law.
Jennifer Groscup, ‘00 JD, is an associate professor of psychology at Scripps College in Claremont, California.

Matt Huss, ‘01 MLS, is a professor of psychology at Creighton University in Omaha, Nebraska.

Bradley McAuliff, ‘03 JD, is a professor of psychology at California State University Northridge.

Monica Miller, ‘02 JD, is an associate professor at the University of Nevada, Reno with a split appointment between the Criminal Justice Department and the interdisciplinary doctoral program in Social Psychology. She also is an adjunct faculty at the Grant Sawyer Center for Justice Studies and a faculty associate for the Women’s Studies Program.

Kathy Olson, ‘81 JD, is the associate director of UNL’s Center on Children, Families, and the Law (CCFL). She is the administrator of CCFL’s training activities for the Nebraska Department of Health and Human Services. She also is an adjunct clinical professor at the College of Law.

Jennifer Robbenolt, ‘96 JD, is a professor of law and psychology at the University of Illinois College of Law. Robbenolt previously served as associate dean for faculty research and development, associate professor and senior fellow in the Center for the Study of Dispute Resolution at the University of Missouri-Columbia School of Law and research associate and lecturer at the Woodrow Wilson School of Public and International Affairs and at Princeton University’s Department of Psychology.

Mark Small, ‘90 JD, is a professor of psychology and associate director of the Institute on Family and Neighborhood Life at Clemson University. He also directs the doctoral graduate program in international family and community studies and will be spending summers from 2015-2017 as a Fulbright Scholar in Albania.

Cassandra Stajduhar, ‘03 JD, is a workers’ compensation judge on the Workers’ Compensation Appeals Board in Long Beach, California.

Christina Studebaker, ‘89 MLS, is a litigation research analyst for the litigation department in the Barnes & Thornburg’s Indianapolis, Indiana, law office and for ThemeVision, the firm’s jury research and advocacy analysis affiliate.

David L. Suggs, ‘79 JD, is of counsel in the Shorewood, Minnesota, law office of Richardson, Patrick, Westbrook & Brickman. In addition to representing people who have been injured by dangerous and defective drugs, Suggs has experience with anti-trust lawsuits and served as defense co-counsel in State of New York vs. Mark David Chapman for the murder of John Lennon.

Pat Tetreault, ‘89 MLS, is the founding director of Student Involvement’s Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Transgender, Queer/Questioning, Asexual & Ally (LGBTQA+) Resource Center at UNL.

Mark W. Patry, ‘01 MLS, is an associate professor and chairperson of the Psychology Department at Saint Mary’s University in Halifax, Nova Scotia.

David Washington, ‘98 MLS, is the founder and CEO of Partnerships for Purpose, a philanthropic advisory firm that coordinates innovative, high-yield public-private partnerships leveraging the reach and influence of policy, entertainment, foundation, and corporate sectors for pro-social change. He is a former aide to President Obama and served as an associate director in the White House as the lead liaison to the business and philanthropy communities. Washington now serves as a senior fellow at the Society & Business Lab at the University of Southern California’s Marshall School of Business.

Charles Thone, ’50, was awarded a 2014 Award of Appreciation by the Nebraska State Bar Association. The Award of Appreciation is awarded to an individual or organization in recognition of outstanding public service creating a better public understanding of the legal profession and the administration of justice. Thone is a former representative to Congress and a former governor of the State of Nebraska.

David B. Downing, ’53, retired from the practice of law in October. In 1959, Downing joined his father’s practice in Superior, and he has made his home there ever since.

Jan Gradwohl, ’54, retired Lancaster County judge, received the Jim Wolf Equal Justice Award from Nebraska Appleseed on October 8.

1960s

Thomas J. Fitchett, ’66, has joined the Lincoln law firm Endacott, Peetz & Timmer as of counsel.

Clayton Yeutter, ’63, secretary of agriculture under President George H.W. Bush, has been chosen to receive the Nebraska Farm Bureau’s Silver Eagle Award.

Robert Hippe, ’68, of Gering, was presented with the Distinguished Alumni Award by the University of Nebraska at Kearney Alumni Association during UNK’s homecoming activities in September. Hippe is a retired district judge from Nebraska’s 12th District, a position he held for 30 years before retiring in 2007. Upon his retirement, he joined Pahlke Law Group as a staff litigator and has served as a mediator.

Kent E. Person, ’68, is of counsel in the Holdrege law firm Person, DeWald & Deaver. Person previously operated the office as Person Law Office.

1970s

James D. Livingston, ’70, retired on October 1, 2014, as district judge for Nebraska’s Ninth Judicial District. He took the bench in July 1992. He has been named The Grand Island Independent’s 2014 Man of the Year.

James M. Walters, ’70, a senior partner in the Atlanta, Georgia, office of Fisher & Phillips, has been selected by his peers for inclusion in The Best Lawyers in America 2015. Walters practices labor and employment law.
Randall Rehmeier,’72, has been appointed to the Nebraska Board of Parole by Gov. Pete Ricketts. Rehmeier, of Nebraska City, is a retired district court judge who served on the bench for 23 years. Rehmeier was also the 2014 recipient of the George H. Turner Award, presented by the Nebraska State Bar Association to a member of NSBA who has demonstrated unusual efforts in furthering the public understanding of the legal system, the administration of justice and confidence in the legal profession.

Ken Bunger,’73, has been appointed to the Nebraska Sesquicentennial Commission and serves on the board of director’s executive subcommittee.

Steven D. Burns,’73, Lancaster County district judge, was presented the 2014 Service to the Community Award by the Nebraska Supreme Court. He worked for the U.S. Department of Justice in Washington, D.C., before returning to Lincoln where he worked as an assistant U.S. attorney, director of the Crime Commission, special prosecutor for the Wounded Knee trials and in private practice.

Leonard Paul Vyhnalek, ’61, passed away January 1, 2015, in North Platte. He was 79 years old. He was a lieutenant and captain in the Army JAG Corps before beginning his career in private practice in North Platte. He was an attorney with Beatty & Morgan from 1967 to 1976, serving as Lincoln County attorney from 1969 to 1975. He was with McCarthy, McCarthy & Vyhnalek from 1976 to 1986, before beginning a solo practice.

G. Bradford Cook, ’62, passed away on August 28, 2014, in Woman Lake in Longville, Minnesota. He was 77 years old. After his graduation from the College of Law, Cook practiced law with Winston, Stawn, Smith & Patterson in Chicago, Illinois, where he specialized in corporate and securities law. He was the youngest attorney in the firm to make partner. Later, he moved to Washington, D.C., where he was appointed general counsel and director of the Security and Exchange Commission’s Division of Market Relations. On March 3, 1973, he was sworn in by President Richard Nixon as the youngest chairman in history of the Securities and Exchange Commission. After his term with the SEC, he returned to private practice, served on various boards and as general counsel for a handful of companies. He was diagnosed with Parkinson’s Disease in 2000.

Michael L. Lazer, ’62, passed away on October 28, 2014, at the age of 76. He began his career doing criminal and divorce cases and then moved to commercial and real estate law. He worked for many firms, spending the last 20 years of his legal career at Smith Gardner Slusky Law in Omaha until he retired in 2013. In 1992, he received the State of Nebraska’s Governor’s Award for Philanthropic Planning.

Harold I. Mosher, ’62, passed away October 18, 2014, at the age of 89. He served the State of Nebraska, its officers and agencies for over 30 years retiring as senior assistant attorney general in 1994. Mosher briefed and argued three cases before the U.S. Supreme Court including the landmark case, Nebraska Press Assn. v. Stuart. He was instrumental in the legal work establishing the Nebraska Educational Television and Radio Network (NET) and in obtaining a negotiated settlement with the NBC television network that resolved NBC’s infringement of the NET logo on terms very favorable to NET.

Eber Cooper, ’66, of Schuyler, passed away on October 2, 2014, in Omaha. He was 73 years old. Cooper was a claims adjuster for several insurance companies, retiring from Continental Western Insurance when he was 63.
Richard Voss, ’66, passed away on January 20, 2015, in Lewistown, Illinois. He was 71 years old. From 1975 until he retired in 1998, Voss taught marketing and finance as an assistant professor at Western Illinois University in Macomb, Illinois. He taught classes in banking, corporate finance and real estate law. Before joining the faculty at Western Illinois, Voss taught at Fort Hays Kansas State College and at the University of Nebraska–Lincoln.

Merlin Everett Remmenga, ’68, of Kingwood, Texas, passed away on December 13, 2013. He was 69 years old. After he graduated from the Law College, Remmenga served two years in the Army during the Vietnam conflict. From 1970-1979, he worked as an attorney for the Metropolitan Utilities District in Omaha. He spent 45 years practicing law in Nebraska and Texas where he was counsel for power and pipeline companies.

Gary F. Hatfield, ’72, of Wahoo, passed away on May 13, 2014, at the age of 74. He served in the U.S. Navy for four years. After graduating from the Law College, Hatfield practiced at Pfries & Torpin Law Firm in Central City. He served as a county judge in Nebraska’s Fifth Judicial District until he retired in 2005.

Michael L. Offner, ’78, died on December 27, 2014, in Red Cloud. He was 62 years old. Offner practiced law in Red Cloud from 1979 until Gov. Mike Johanns appointed him to serve as a county judge in Nebraska’s 10th Judicial District in 2001. He served as Webster County attorney for 18 of those years. Beginning in 2005, he served as lead judge for the 10th Judicial District’s National Adoption Day celebration. In 2009, the Nebraska Supreme Court presented Offner with its Outstanding Judge for Service to the Judiciary Award.

Corliss G. Young, ’80, passed away on April 30, 2014, after a long battle with M.S. and a brain trauma injury from a fall from a bike years ago. She was 58 years old. She served as an aid for Nebraska State Senator Jerome Warner.

Timothy J. Binder, ’81, passed away on December 5, 2014, at his home in Vancouver, Washington, after a long battle with cancer. He was 57 years old. After his graduation for the College of Law, he clerked for U.S. Magistrate Judge David L. Piester in Lincoln. He then moved to Washington, D.C., to work for the Department of Transportation in the Office of Counsel. He later transferred to the Department of Agriculture as counsel for the Pacific Northwest in Portland, Oregon. While working in Portland, Binder graduated from Western Seminary with a Master of Divinity Degree and pastored a Portland church. After his law school graduation, he began his second career at the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) in Omaha until he retired in 2000. His third career was founding a non-profit organization to provide affordable housing and providing job training to inmates, called Prairie Gold Homes/Bar None Housing.

William “Bill” Wroblewski, ’93, of Lincoln, passed away November 5, 2014, at the age of 52. He was a seasoned marathon runner and a Boston Marathon qualifier.
Each spring, The Nebraska Transcript recognizes alumni and friends who have made given their time to the College of Law during the previous year. This Annual Volunteer Report recognizes the time given to the College between January 1 and December 31, 2014. We are pleased to report that more than 1,900 volunteer hours were given to the College and its students in 2014. This is an increase of approximately 500 hours from the previous year. The time and talent that our alumni and friends give make a tremendous impact on the student experience and education. Thank you for your commitment to the College of Law.

Considerable care has gone into the preparation of this report. Each friend’s time is valued and every effort has been made to ensure the accuracy of the Annual Volunteer Report. Please bring any errors or omissions to the attention of Molly Brummond at 402-472-8375 or molly.brummond@unl.edu.

For this publication, we have honored individual requests from donors as to how they wish their names to appear on annual reports. If you would like your name to prefer in way different from how it appears in this report, please contact Denise Donovan at 1-800-432-3216 or denise.donovan@nufoundation.org.
