Dear Alumni and Friends,

Within a two-week period last fall, the College of Law lost two of its most significant members: Norm Thorson and Henry Grether. Others have written about them elsewhere in this issue and, since I have already published most of this in another forum, some of you may already have seen what I have to say here. But I wanted to say it again in THE NEBRASKA TRANSCRIPT, so that all of us can remember these lives again, and celebrate them.

In a small community like the Law College, it is easy to delineate the ways in which influential men like Norm and Henry have made significant contributions to the College and the legal profession. In a column like this, that is what I can write about, and I will. But both men were also influential in much deeper and more subtle ways — on students, on their fellow faculty members, on the culture and tone of the College. While these are as important as their more visible contributions, if not more so, they are also much more difficult to discuss. I am too little the poet to attempt the task. But I feel them, the rest of the faculty feels them, as do the generations of alumni and students who knew Norm and Henry. So, although I can only talk about a small part of the contributions Norm and Henry made to our community and our lives, please understand that beyond these are much deeper reservoirs of respect and affection.

Norman W. Thorson came to the University of Nebraska in 1967 from his parents' farm in Mead, Neb. He earned all his degrees from the University of Nebraska-Lincoln: B.S. in 1971 (agricultural honors), M.S. in 1974 (agricultural economics), J.D. in 1977 (with high distinction) and Ph.D. in 1979 (agricultural economics). It says a great deal about what kind of a student Norm was that he joined the law faculty in 1977, immediately after graduating from the College.

Norm was influential in many different spheres. Within Nebraska, Norm, with Professor Richard Harnsberger, wrote the seminal book on Nebraska water law, he was chair and member of the Central Interstate Low Level Radioactive Waste Compact Commission, and he wrote many reports for the unicameral and state agencies on water and environmental issues. Within the national legal and academic communities, he co-authored the seminal textbook on Agricultural Law, he was a member of the prestigious American Law Institute, he served as president of the American Agricultural Law Association, and he was a lifetime trustee of the Rocky Mountain Mineral Law Foundation. At the University and Law College, Norm was president of the Academic Senate, the Harry A. Spencer Professor of Law, chair of the most recent major curricular review committee, and teacher of most of the practicing water and environmental law practitioners in the State. Norm will be missed in all these arenas and, even more, as a friend, colleague, deeply loyal and yet scathingly critical Husker fan, source of tips on great restaurants and good travel, and in many other ways.

Henry M. Grether, Jr., joined the faculty in 1948, served as dean from 1966 to 1977 and retired in 1990. Henry's influence on the College was tremendous and is still visible today, more than a quarter-century after he stepped down as dean. The class Henry inherited in 1966 contained no women — zero. By the time he stepped down as dean in 1977, the class contained about 35 percent women, with the number climbing. Henry is the person most responsible for the existence of the Law College's main building, Ross McNamara Hall. He raised the money; convinced the Board of Regents, governor and legislature that it was necessary; and supervised its construction. The largest funds in our endowment are due to Henry's work. He founded the Fall Institute and the Great Plains Federal Tax Institute, central features of the College's strong continuing legal education efforts. But, as with Norm, despite all this, Henry's influence continues to be strong in more personal ways as well. About one-third of the current faculty were hired when Henry was dean, and more than two-thirds of the faculty knew him as dean, fellow faculty member or both. To this day, I have no doubt that our strong and positive faculty culture is due in no small part to his influence and leadership.

Thank you, Norm. Thank you, Henry. Farewell and Godspeed.

Law College Celebrates Newly Remodeled Building
Memories Flow as Facility Is Dedicated; Dust, Noise, Outages Give Way to Praise

"This marks the end," said College of Law Dean Steven L. Willborn, "of a couple of years of living with dust, noise, electrical outages, fires, and interesting interchanges between law students and construction workers." Those words of April 11, 2003, not only signaled the end of major construction on the College's expansion and remodeling project but also the beginning of the dedication ceremony that celebrated the completion of the newly renovated Law College building.

Willborn thanked the many alumni and friends of the Law College whose support made possible exciting additions to the Law College like the Judge Harry A. Spencer Study Room; the Presidents Room, honoring past presidents of the Nebraska State Bar Association, and bar associations from other states, who were College of Law graduates; the Herbert D. Curtiss Family Room; the Dick Ricketts Study Room; the LeMay Family Room; the Kutak Rock Computer Room; the Union Bank Computer Room; the Governors Room, honoring the five Law College graduates who served as governors of their states; the Berger/Harmsberger Faculty Wing; the Oscar and Ruby Wittmann Student Lounge; the Harold W. Kauffman Legal Writing Suite; and the Richard S. and Catherine Stuart Schmoker Courtyard.

Norman Redlich on J. Lee Rankin
Norman Redlich, former dean of New York University Law School, spoke next about J. Lee Rankin, a 1930 graduate of the Law College who served as solicitor general during the Eisenhower Administration and was chief counsel to the Warren Commission that investigated the assassination of President John F. Kennedy. The renovated law building includes the J. Lee Rankin Seminar Room and an archive room that contains many valuable items from Rankin's years of service.

Redlich was a long time friend of Rankin's and served under him as assistant counsel to the Warren Commission and also in the administration of John Lindsay, mayor of New York. Redlich commented on Rankin's "complete lack of ego," which "enabled Lee to reach out for, and utilize the full talents of the very best people he could find to work for him, regardless of political affiliation, race, gender, or any other characteristic that had nothing to do with ability or integrity." This characteristic, Redlich said, "provided Lee with the kind of freedom that is denied to people who are encumbered by their own egos."

Redlich said that Rankin's "quiet demeanor concealed an inner toughness." While he was willing to compromise on many issues, he was "immovable on matters of principle."

Redlich concluded his remarks by remembering that during his 13 years as dean he would describe at commencement the qualities that are required of a great lawyer. "There was never any doubt in my mind," he said, "that I was describing J. Lee Rankin. He embodied the qualities of intellect, humanity, concern for others and dedication both to the interests of the client and the public good that should be the aspirational goal of every lawyer."

Harvey Perlman on the Schmids
Perhaps the most dramatic addition to the Law College building is the M. Brian Schmid Reading Room, with its floor-to-ceiling glass window. University Chancellor Harvey S. Perlman spoke of Brian Schmid and his parents, Marvin and Virginia Schmid, at the dedication ceremony. Brian died in 1984 at the age of 43, cutting short a successful career as a lawyer and businessman. Brian's mother, Virginia, and son, Eric, were at the ceremony.

The family's endowment of the reading room in Brian's memory is one of many of the contributions it has made to the Law College. The fact that the law library is named the Marvin and Virginia Schmid Law Library is a

Bronze Busts of Weaver, Hathaway, Nelson, Thone, Morrison To Be Displayed

By Aliza Anvari

Soon there will be some new bodies at the College of Law. They will not really be new to the College, nor will they be actual bodies – not warm ones anyway. These new bodies will be sculpted bronze busts by Nebraska artist Fred Hoppe of five remarkable people who were once familiar faces around the Law College. Now these faces are more familiar to the public. These busts will be of five College of Law alumni who were once state governors. On Saturday, February 22, 2003, the Law College hosted a Governors Room dedication and unveiled clay mock-ups of what will soon be sculptures for the College's new Governors Room. The Governors Room is located in the northeast corner of the second floor of the library.

Dean Steven L. Willborn welcomed everyone to the dedication ceremony and emphasized that the event was to celebrate the achievements of five men and the completion of the Governors Room. Then remarks were made on behalf of or by each of the five former governors.

Arthur J. Weaver, Class of 1896
Nebraska Governor 1929-1931

Melinda Morgan spoke on behalf of her grandfather, the late Arthur J. Weaver, who was affectionately referred to as "A.J." He was a native born Nebraskan and loved farming. In fact, Weaver and his brother, Phillip, were responsible for developing the "Weaver Apple." Weaver also contributed to turning the Missouri River into a major waterway that would revitalize the Midwest. Weaver, a survivor of the Great Depression, deplored the idea of government deficits and would probably be shocked at the amount of credit card and consumer debt Americans have today. This six foot man was a loving father to his kids and, according to Morgan, "wore many hats and wore them well."

Stanley Knapp Hathaway, Class of 1950
Wyoming Governor 1967-1975

L. Stanley Lowe, '49, spoke on behalf of Stanley Knapp Hathaway. Unfortunately, Governor Hathaway's health prevented him from attending the ceremony. Lowe began by noting the impossibility of reviewing in such a short time the life of such a man. Hathaway was born in Nebraska, grew up on a dusty homestead, received the Congressional Medal of Honor as a hero during World War II, attended the University and the College of Law on the G.I. Bill, became governor of Wyoming and chairman of the Republican Party, and served as secretary of the interior in the Ford Cabinet. Lowe summarized, "Stan was a man of character, a man held in great respect by both political parties and a person who dedicated himself to public service."
testament to those contributions. For Perlman, the pleasure of dedicating the reading room was “tinged with a bittersweet edge,” as Marvin Schmid had passed away the previous May. Perlman recalled the remarks Marvin Schmid made at the Schmid Library’s 1992 dedication. They were equally fitting at this dedication. Said Schmid, “Knowing, remembering, that while castles built of stone and marble will ultimately crack and crumble and disappear, that which is taken into the hearts and minds of men and women through their learning and passed on through generations to come will last forever.”

Theodore C. Sorensen

The last speaker of the afternoon was the most well-known - College of Law alum, Theodore C. Sorensen, ’51, of counsel to Paul, Weiss, Rifkind, Wharton & Garrison of New York and former legal counsel to President John F. Kennedy. Sorensen said he knew he wanted to attend law school when he graduated from Lincoln High School. Even though he entered a program that allowed him to take only two years of undergraduate courses followed by four years of law school, Sorensen was anxious to take law-related courses right away. He remembers an undergraduate advisor discouraging his plan. “They’ll make a plumber out of you soon enough,” the advisor said, pointing to the law school.

Sorensen became much more than a plumber, and he credits the training he received at the Law College as “putting me in good stead for the rest of my life.” Years later when he was working in the White House, he took two of his former law professors, Fred Buetel and Henry Foster to visit President Kennedy in the oval office. He introduced them as the two men who taught him all the law he knew. “I hope they taught you well,” Kennedy remarked.

While this occasion dedicates a facility, Sorensen said, it more importantly also celebrates the dedication of its alumni – their “dedication to the law and to the service of their fellow citizens,” lawyers “who cherish and uphold the laws of this country including its remarkable Constitution.”

A lawyer’s duty to uphold the law is even more important in times of crisis, said Sorensen, obviously thinking about the war in Iraq that had begun only weeks before. He recalled the words of Justice Brandeis, dissenting in Olmstead v. United States:

> “Experience should teach us to be most on guard to protect liberty when the Government’s purposes are beneficent. Men born to freedom are naturally alert to repel invasion of their liberty by evil-minded rulers. The greatest dangers to liberty lurk in insidious encroachment by men of zeal, well-meaning but without understanding.”

The program ended with a film that began with the Tunnel Walk’s flight across Nebraska, but ended up at the new Law College building. It invited those assembled to tour the Law College and see its new look.
E. Benjamin Nelson, Class of 1970
Nebraska Governor 1991-1999

U.S. Senator Ben Nelson began by thanking the Law College for the honor bestowed on the governors and said, "I was thinking that if five of us were able to graduate from the old facility, how many more of us will graduate from this wonderful new facility?" Nelson also joked that being a bronze statute could cause an acting politician some concern. People could say, "Now you are dense, or worse, there is nothing between the ears." He also joked that he had asked Robert Redford to be available to model for his bust.

Nelson commented on the many connections between the governors. He mentioned that his kindergarten teacher, more than a few years ago, was Maxine Morrison, wife of Governor Frank Morrison.

Finally, Nelson commented on some of life's lessons. "Learning is a lifetime experience, and I learned something at law school that was far more important than facts. I learned that there were many different ways to consider something." Nelson added that until you learn that there are many different ways to see the same thing, ways different from your own vantage point, then you really are not able to interface with the world. "When you can't recognize other people's perspectives and other people's ideas and give value to those ideas, even if they differ from yours, then it is very difficult to be successful in life in anything you do—particularly the law." Nelson added that he hopes to be around to celebrate the day when additional busts are added to the Governors' Room.

Charles Thone, Class of 1950
Nebraska Governor 1979-1983

Governor Charles Thone began by emphasizing that "I've said it many, many times, that this is a very, very special law school—one of the very best in the Midwest." During his speech, Thone spoke of the feats of General Douglas McArthur and repeated an old barracks refrain, "Old soldiers never die, they just fade away." But then Thone, looking around at the audience, added, "Well, I think its pretty obvious that old governors don't fade away even after they die! Even after the Grim Reaper makes his final call, we'll have this great Law College here with these magnificent busts for our remembrance."

Thone spent 12 years in private law practice, worked for the Attorney General's Office in Nebraska, spent eight years in Congress and became Nebraska's 34th governor. "In all these years and all these jobs, to the best of my limited abilities, I have honored the law which has so honored me."

Frank Brenner Morrison, Class of 1931
Nebraska Governor 1961-1967

Governor Frank Brenner Morrison began by joking, "I have achieved my lifetime achievement, I've attended my own Memorial Service." Morrison reflected on how he met many remarkable people in his lifetime and agreed with the words of Dean Roscoe Pound, that "the law is a jealous mistress," but Morrison added, "I shall never be able to repay the debts of my mistress."

Morrison's parting words were, "No matter how brilliant you are, you still make mistakes and need to pursue truth in relationships."

To conclude the ceremony, Dean Willborn read a letter of congratulations written by Vice President Dick Cheney, a good friend of former Wyoming Governor Stanley Hathaway. Wrote Cheney, "Some of the most important lessons we learn in life come, not from our studies, but from the example of others around us. My highest hope with this room is that every person who enters it will know something of the men for whom it is named, about their lives, great accomplishments, purpose and service.... This room, like the men it honors, will be a source of inspiration for many years."
Forty-five graduates of the College of Law have gone on to become presidents of statewide bar associations. Most of these have been in Nebraska, but three have served in other states: California, Iowa and Oregon. On October 21, 2003, these graduates were honored at the dedication of the Presidents Room, a seminar room located in the Schmid Law Library.

Each president was honored with a plaque bearing his name and years of service as president, as well as two pictures—one taken while the honoree was a student at the Law College, the other taken during his service as bar president. Dean Steve Willborn pointed out that the College had ordered many more blank plaques, and left room to add new names and pictures, when more of the College's graduates follow in the footsteps of these men.

The bar presidents who are recognized in the Presidents Room are listed in the box below.

For three years members of the Class of 2003 not only went through the right of passage of law school together, but also experienced events of monumental importance to this nation — the terror of the attacks of September 11, 2001, the disputed presidential election of 2000 and the Gulf War of 2003. Join the Class of 2003 as they reflect on the historical events that made headlines during the years of their legal education.

Reflections on 9/11...

It is undeniable. Just like past generations will never be able to erase the memory of where they were and what they were doing when they found out John F. Kennedy was assassinated, members of the Class of 2003 will forever be haunted by the images of September 11, 2001. It is a little bit easier to reflect on what has happened after some time has passed. But, for the whole nation, trying to understand what was happening, contemporaneously was next to impossible. This was not supposed to happen on American soil. This was not supposed to happen period. Human beings being used as bombs are bitter pills to swallow. What took less than a few hours to occur will take lifetimes to accept. That day marked a change in the lives of all Americans. For the first time in a long time, we were forced to take a good, long hard look at ourselves as Americans and as a nation grappling with the fact that others hated us. We realized that we, too, were vulnerable.

We tried to make sense of it. World leaders are still trying to make sense of it. Who is to blame? Is the war against terrorism or something else? Religious leaders are trying to make sense of it. How do we prevent hatred of other religions? Legal scholars are trying to make sense of it. How do we balance homeland security with the rights of our citizens? Can justice be found in our court system? American citizens are trying to make sense of it. Should we go on as before or continue to mourn? Before 9/11, it seemed that all American pop culture cared about was what Britney Spears was wearing. But after a barrage of horrific images, American society re-evaluated what was important and what was not. We wore the ribbons. We displayed bumper stickers. We gathered aid. We waved the flags. We called our loved ones. We sent messages to others not to misplace their hate on the innocent. Our new heroes were fire fighters, police officers and the mayor of New York. Our new motto was “United We Stand.” But everyone’s experience on that fateful day and reaction to its ramifications is unique, including those of the members of the Class of 2003.

Michael Fedorenko was driving to class when a friend called him and told him a plane crashed into the World Trade Center. At first, he was not overly concerned because he knew a plane crashed into the Empire State building many years ago without causing much damage. When Fedorenko arrived at the Law College, however, he saw students and professors alike with eyes glued to television sets in the lobby. “It came on the bottom of the screen that the Towers had fallen and I was like, well, no, that can’t be! The towers couldn’t have fallen. This is the World Trade Center. I’ve seen it from my house for the last 30 years. How could the World Trade Center be brought down?” He went home and made phone calls to people he knew there, but none would go through. Later he found out that several people he knew, including two firemen and a police officer, died there or were never found. “I think people back East are certainly much more sensitive to the issue than people here in the Midwest, although the people here were really big with the flag-waving and things like that. They were very nice with the collections; they became very patriotic, but I don’t think you can really feel it unless you were there to see those statues, which was really what those buildings were, those tributes to American ingenuity, to American financial power, to see them destroyed like that. I think you really have to know them and live with them in order to realize what exactly was lost.”

Sharon Joseph was at the Law College when she found out about the events of 9/11. “I was sitting in my car studying, and I called a friend of mine and asked her ‘What’s happening?’ and she replied, ‘Oh, my God, don’t you know?’ When I went in the school, it was just like a ghost town. I didn’t see anyone. Everyone was downstairs, and I could hear the reports on the television. I have never seen it so silent in that building.”

The event struck a chord with Dan Van Gorp. “Even though time has passed, it is still hard to believe that it actually happened. It was a day we should never forget; nor will we. It showed that we can never be too prepared.”

Surmised Angela Williams, “It affected each of us so deeply and in so many ways. In fact, I think as time passes, we’ll keep realizing other ways that that day has truly affected our lives and the world around us.” You need only board an airplane to see just how true those words are.

...Gore v. Bush...

The tragedy of September 11, was not the only event members of the Class of 2003 survived. You may remember that little election that ended up in the United States Supreme Court and divided the nation into two political factions. You may also remember Florida in the center of the controversy and those little things called “chads,” which apparently had committed the sin of getting pregnant. It was the Gore v. Bush election and more than a few Democrats are still bitter. For a while, it seemed Floridians were the butt of every talk show host’s jokes and the two candidates were the focus of every forwarded e-mail.

Patrick Dalen commented. “The Gore v. Bush decision dispelled any illusions that the Supreme Court is above partisan politics and made clear the justices do have strong allegiances to the political parties that placed them on the court.”

Mike Fedorenko felt that it was an amazing event in American history and is something that will have ramifications on future elections. “We will have hundreds of attorneys standing by expecting close elections, and from now on we will have elections decided by lawsuits rather than the people’s vote. I think it was a joke, and it makes America look bad and proves we need more than two parties in this country.” His solution? “I think they should stop doing exit polls. I think that would eliminate some of the problem. If they had standardized electronic voting throughout the country these problems wouldn’t exist, and we could get rid of the lawsuits and go back to the people’s will ruling rather than letting the Supreme Court decide the winner of the election.”

...and the War in Iraq

The Class of 2003’s last year of law school was also marred with calamity and uncertainty. The nation had to grapple with both a bad economy and a war. As if the soon to be graduated students did not have enough trouble on their hands with preparing for the bar exam, they had to face one of the worst job markets in years and the possibility of being called into service. Tim McCarty felt that the war was necessary. “I’m all for the liberation of the Iraqi people and for our national security. Saddam Hussein should have been taken out years ago, but it has to happen sometime. No one likes to lose our nation’s troops, especially when we see it on TV every night. But, they are giving the ultimate sacrifice for the safety and security of their own nation, and for another people’s probably never knew.”

While the students’ individual viewpoints differ greatly, the Class of 2003 is held together by many bonds. Not only do this year’s graduates share the common bond of the law school experience, they share the bond of the events that occurred while they were in school. They lived and studied together in a time of great legal and political change. Whatever may be in store for the members of the Class of 2003, they will always be affected by those climactic events they experienced together.
Honor Class Reunion

Alums Share Law College Memories,
Pride in Their School, Accomplishments

BY BRETT DAE

The Honor Class Reunion, which included a dinner and a luncheon on May 9-10, respectively, was more than just an opportunity for former classmates to reminisce with others who shared similar experiences. It was also an opportunity for the Law College to say thanks to those whose accomplishments in the years since their graduation have made the legal profession and the Law College proud.

Among the attendees were attorneys who have taken drastically different paths in their lives. Many of those present took the traditional approach and practiced law in a firm or as a sole practitioner. Others served their government, some becoming judges on the state or federal level. Another attendee continues to serve the Law College — class of 1953 graduate John Gradwohl. A strikingly common theme among several of the attendees was their service to their country. Several of the attorneys present served in the armed forces before and after law school, and many of them worked in the Judge Advocate General department of the armed forces.

As an ice-breaker, Willborn tested the attendees' memories of Law College history and 1953 events, as well as their knowledge of current facts about the law school. For example, Willborn reminded the honor class about the sports conference the University was in a half century ago — Nebraska played in the Big Seven. Also, many in attendance were surprised to remember that it was in 1953 that Queen Elizabeth II of England was crowned, the same year as (or after) some of the honor classes graduated law school!

The gathering provided those in attendance an opportunity to expound upon their experiences — in essence that has become the prevailing feature of the event. They took the opportunity to do so when introduced, and they also took the opportunity to compare their stories with those of other classes. Despite their many accomplishments, many of their fondest memories pertaining to the law stem back to their experiences at the Law College.

One example is Robert Steininger, '53, of Milwaukee, Wis. Steininger confessed that he did not share the awful memories of the law school curriculum that seem to make up the current law school lore — he actually enjoyed law school!

At the honor luncheon, Steininger also shared the wise decision he made between hanging out in the student lounge and passing his law school courses. He explained that while at the Law College he was accustomed to playing the card game Pitch for money in the student lounge. Professor Grether also would join in occasionally. When it came time for Steininger to take one of Grether's classes, he introspectively weighed the pros and cons of playing Pitch or passing...
Dean Steve Willborn presents William Hastings, '48, with an Honor Reunion Certificate.

Another graduate from the class of 1953, Gordon Fillman, continues to reside in his hometown of York, Neb., which, he pointed out, is also the hometown of Chancellor Harvey Perlman. Fillman is one of many in his honor class who proudly served their country after graduating from law school. He went to Officer Candidate School in November 1953. He also mentioned that he met his wife on a bus in New York City!

Fillman also shared a humorous story about the trials and tribulations in Dean Frederick Beutel's class. At the honor luncheon, Fillman told how one day when Beutel called on him to brief a case, Fillman elected to “take a pass.” Incredulously, Dean Beutel replied, “What makes you think you will?”

Another member of the class of 1953, Joel Babcock, who resides in Illinois, has done many things since his graduation. Among his accomplishments, he has served as a second vice president of General Reinsurance Corporation and as president of a food pantry benefiting the poor.

In the biographical sheet he filled out for the event, Babcock stated that he “really enjoyed the study of law at Nebraska.” But even those with fond memories were subject to the age-old law school pressures. At the honor luncheon, Babcock shared that Dean Beutel gave him and his classmates the notorious speech all law student have heard: Beutel said, “Look to your left, look to your right, some of those students will probably not be there [at graduation].” Dean Beutel added, “Some of you will be working at a filling station.” Coincidently, Babcock did work at a filling station in his youth!

Warren Wise, '53, who resides in Florida, said at the reunion dinner that he is expecting a grandchild and has honed his golf game to a +4 handicap. Of course, he, too, had a story about Dean Beutel. Wise said that Beutel was in the habit of going through the class roster and asking students if they “had the case.” After several students replied in the negative, Beutel became exasperated and eerily started whistling. Beutel pulled out a knife and cut out a student’s name out of the roster sheet and threw it away! Wise added that no one ever found out whose name Beutel had cut out.

Thomas Brogan, '43, is another Law College graduate who served in the Army after graduation. Brugan, whose two brothers also attended the University, mentioned some of the extracurricular activities in which he and his classmates participated. He said that students at the Law College and engineering school frequently had confrontations. He added that the scuffles generally resulted in destruction of property and several fights!

The Honorable William Colwell, '38, mentioned some stark differences between law school now and when he attended. He said that in his class there were only four women. Further, he stated that tuition was $50 per semester and books were rented for $5 per semester.

As can be expected, all the returning graduates who attended the honor class reunion had fond memories of their experiences at the Law College. Although “the old law school building” in which the honor reunion classes attended class no longer houses the Law College and the new law school building recently underwent a $9 million renovation, some aspects of the law community do not change.
Family Tradition Ceremony

Fourteen Graduates, Family Members Honored

At its 2003 graduation, the College of Law continued its recent tradition of recognizing the significant contributions that family loyalty makes to the Law College. At the Family Tradition Ceremony prior to the graduation, 14 graduates were joined by family members who had also graduated from the Law College. The alumni were each presented with a plaque in the shape of the state of Nebraska with their names inscribed alongside the name of their current graduating relative.

Former President of CBS Leaves Law College $3.4 Million

The estate of Merle, ’29, and Frances Jones contained charitable provisions that will have a tremendous impact on the College of Law for generations to come. The College was recently notified by the Jones family attorney in Los Angeles that it will be the beneficiary of a $3.4 million dollar bequest from the Jones estate. The Jones gift is dedicated to student scholarships and facilities improvements. “These are two of our highest current priorities,” said College of Law Dean Steve Willborn. “Because of the recent increases in tuition and fees, the funding of scholarships is especially important. It will help us keep the doors wide open for all Nebraskans. The portion of the bequest intended for facilities improvements will permit us to improve classrooms and bring them up to the same standards of beauty and functionality as the rest of the building.

“When the College receives such generous gifts, it always causes us to rededicate ourselves to the vision of our benefactors,” Willborn continued. “We will strive to continue to provide an education that will permit our bright and ambitious students to lead highly productive and rewarding lives, following in the footsteps of alums like Merle Jones.”

A native of Omaha, Merle Jones attended the University as an undergraduate and later as a law student. Jones earned his law degree in 1929 and began practicing law in Omaha. It was not long after this that he developed an interest in the radio business while doing some legal work for an advertising agency in Omaha.

Throughout the 1930s, Jones worked in several jobs related to the broadcasting industry, including program announcer, ad salesman and management. He joined CBS Television in 1951, after several years at CBS Radio, and became the president of CBS Television in 1957. Upon his retirement in 1968, CBS announced, ‘Merle-Jones’ decision to retire brings to a close a distinguished career at CBS spanning 33 years. During that time he has made a magnificent contribution to the growth and development of CBS, domestically and internationally. A gifted administrator and a born leader, he has truly been a prime mover in the ascendancy of our broadcast operations.”

A devoted couple who counted U.S. presidents and movie stars among their personal friends, Merle and Frances Jones enjoyed 44 years of marriage prior to Merle’s death in 1976. Frances Jones maintained some contact with the Law College until her death in March 2002, but the estate gift came as a surprise to both College and University officials.

“Frances Jones was devoted to her husband and became reconnected with the law school in 1989 when she attended what would have been Merle’s 60th class reunion,” said Chancellor Harvey Perlman. “I’m delighted that both she and Merle understood how important the law school was to Merle’s career and decided in their wills to contribute to its future success.”

While serving as head of the CBS Television station in St. Louis, Merle Jones talked President Harry Truman into helping promote the “Smokie the Bear” drive to wipe out forest fires. The two became longtime friends.

Eye-Opening Panel Discussion Honors Black History Month

By Aliza Anvari

On February 20, 2003, the Black Law Students Association and the College of Law celebrated Black History Month by hosting an intriguing panel discussion that raised many interesting questions. The theme was “Contemporary Repercussions of Slavery and Institutionalized Racism.” The panel, moderated by College of Law Professor Anna Shavers, featured Professor Thomas Mitchell of the University of Wisconsin and Professor Ronald Stephens, assistant professor of anthropology, geology and ethnic studies at UNL.

Addressing the Wealth Gap

Professor Thomas Mitchell spoke on the topic “Addressing the Black Wealth/White Wealth Gap: A Civil Rights Issue of Our Time.” Mitchell has won national recognition for his work on black land loss in the rural South and has been awarded a $220,000 grant from the Ford Foundation to pursue this research. Mitchell is also associated with the Center for the Study of Race, Politics and Culture at the University of Chicago.

Mitchell discussed how African Americans acquired approximately 15 million acres of land in the South in the 50 years following emancipation. The distribution of “40 acres and a mule” ended when President Andrew Johnson aborted the Reconstruction initiative to provide land to African Americans.

While in 1920 there were 925,708 black farmers, today, only 18,451 farmers remain and, of those, only 745 are under the age 35. Mitchell admitted that farming is a tough business and that there have been a lot of farm consolidations, but he demonstrated that the land loss among white farmers was nowhere as precipitous as among black farmers.

Mitchell provided many reasons for the extinction of the black landowner. One of the primary factors was the partition sales of black-owned land held under tenancies in common. “Like many other poor Americans, rural African American landowners have tended not to make wills; at the owner’s death state, intestacy laws enable a broad class of heirs to acquire an interest in the real property of the decedent. Interests in property transferred by intestacy from one generation to another become highly fragmented, splintering the fee into hundreds and even thousands of interests.” Mitchell explained that opportunistic lawyers and land speculators were able to purchase an interest in these lands and then force a sale of the land ending the tenancy in common. The property that went to the public auction was sold at under value prices.

Other factors contributing to the decline include discrimination by the United States Department of Agriculture; foreclosures; tax sales in which the property owner was not given notice; adverse possession after, for instance, fence lines were moved; and eminent domain actions in which white land owners were compensated as much as five times more than black landowners.

Getting the USDA to stop its discriminatory practices was a daunting task. The agency would throw away many of the complaints it received and it did not follow any clear guidelines. However, in Pigford v. Glickman, a class action lawsuit was brought on the grounds that for decades the USDA partook in the systematic discrimination against black landowners. This involved, among other things, the denial of operating loans to credit-worthy black farmers, the denial of loans late in the season and the electing of all-white farmers to determine who would get approved for a loan in a particular county.
The result was a consent decree that provided class members with little or no documentary evidence a payment of $50,000 and the forgiveness of any debt owed to the USDA and allowed other class members to prove their claims in a one day mini-trial before an arbitrator in which the amount of monetary damages was not capped. The settlement cost the U.S. government $2.25 billion, which made it the largest civil rights case ever settled by the federal government. But it was made over the objections of many class members who made clear they wanted the government to restore the land that they lost as a direct result of USDA discrimination.

In 1990, 135 years after the abolition of slavery, black Americans owned only 1% of the total wealth in America. The average white family’s net worth registers at $72,000 as compared to the net worth of the average black family in America of $9,800. This discrepancy is what led Mitchell to segue into what he appropriately labeled the “wealth perspective” and the effects of poverty after the “hardscrabble tale of property past.”

According to Mitchell, assets are more important than income because assets can be leveraged in a way income cannot. For instance, white Americans are 38 percent more likely to have undergraduate degrees than blacks. But if these results are adjusted for wealth, blacks are more likely to have bachelor degrees than whites. Black Americans, Mitchell told his audience, are still suffering today as a result of the past injustices they faced concerning their property.

Mitchell ended his discussion by emphasizing how important it was for lawyers and students to do pro bono work and educate themselves on how the civil rights of the poor can be taken advantage of: “We need ongoing efforts, but we are planting the seeds.”

Reparations for Slavery

Professor Ronald Stephens spoke on “Historical Efforts to Obtain Reparations for Slavery.” He discussed how the Black Manifesto, or the call for black reparations, takes many forms. The notion behind “reparations” is essentially redressing a wrong, but can range in complexity from how reparations are to be paid to whom exactly to pay. Reparations can range from a mere apology to financial compensation. They can be paid to descendants of victims or paid collectively to a particular community or charitable organization. The essence of reparations, however, is primarily symbolic.

Stephens discussed the history of reparations and mentioned some successful cases. In 1994, Florida agreed to pay $2.1 million to the survivors of the 1923 Rosewood Massacre. A few Native American tribes, like the Lakota of South Dakota, have also been successful at litigation involving reparations.

In 2000, Rep. Tony Hall proposed H.R. 356, a formal resolution to make reparations for slavery. But, the proposal to have Congress pay for laws it enacted over 150 years ago is far from resolved. It is a poignant and difficult question, but Stephens gave his audience a powerful glimpse into history and the thought process needed to address these issues today.
Pre-Law Summer Institute Introduces Students to the Law

BY KELLY BARTLING
UNIVERSITY COMMUNICATIONS

Some of the 29 students in College of Law Dean Steve Willborn's mini-course on discrimination may never take another law class, may never sit for the Law School Admission Test or ever apply to law school.

But for the month last summer that the diverse group of undergraduates spent studying, reading, writing and taking practice tests, and talking to Nebraska lawyers and judges, the students had a personal experience with the scholarship and craft of law.

With the ability to experience a real class, meet lawyers, hear about the profession and learn more about law careers, many of the 29 Nebraska Pre-law Institute students now are convinced that law is for them.

Some, like Daniel Dawes, a spring graduate of Nova Southeastern University in Miami, already knew that law school was in their future. Dawes had selected the College of Law last spring after becoming interested in law late in his undergraduate career.

"I had no pre-law background and I never went to school to pursue a law degree," Dawes said. "But my senior year I had an internship in a hospital and I started thinking that maybe law would be good for me. I've always had a passion for health care administration, but during my internship I thought the law degree would make me more marketable in that field."

So, Dawes attended the Pre-law Institute with the goal of getting as much experience as possible in classes like Willborn's one-week mini-course, Employment Discrimination Law.

"I've really gained an insight into what to expect," he said, "and I think I've learned some great skills, studying and writing, that will be important in the fall."

But others, like Xuan-Trang Ho, a sophomore at Nebraska Wesleyan University, hadn't intended to make law school part of their career plan - until the institute.

"Now, I'm very interested, and I'm probably 90 percent sure I'll go to law school," Ho said. "The summer institute really influenced my decision. The best part was getting to know more about the profession, see what a class is like and practice the LSAT. I was intimidated at first, but now I see how two years from now my performance (on the LSAT) will probably be good enough to get in. I really, really enjoyed every moment of the institute."

That's good news to the profession, the Law School Admission Council, the Nebraska State Bar Association, Union Pacific Railroad and the University, who invited the 29 as part of an effort to expose more minorities and underrepresented populations to the promises and challenges of a career in law. Together, the sponsors of the summer institute hoped to encourage diverse candidates to enter the field.

"Part of our goal is to help the bar become more diverse and to encourage more visibility and interest in the profession among diverse students," Willborn said. "Having these students know more about law school helps everyone involved: the students, the bar and the Law College."
The minority institute was the first at the Law College and one of only several in the nation, and the winner of a $100,000 grant awarded by the Law School Admission Council. The funds helped provide the classes, materials, on-campus room and board, and stipends to the 29 participants. [The Law College has received a grant to run the institute again in 2004.]

The students represented the University of Nebraska at Omaha, the University of Nebraska at Kearney, Wayne State, Chadron State and Nebraska Wesleyan, as well as specially targeted historically black institutions who partner often with the University: Alcorn State, Florida A&M and Dillard, and others like Nevada-Las Vegas, Houston and Northern Colorado. Five UNL students attended, including recent grad Brent Stanfield, who was accepted to the Law College for the fall of 2003.

“It's been great,” Stanfield said on the second-to-last day of class. “The confidence we've gotten coming into our first class is going to be invaluable. Now we really know what to expect.”

In addition to the classroom instruction and brief seminars, tours, practice tests, advice from professionals and interaction with their peers, the students also had input from mentors from the bar association who volunteered to help.

"Some of these mentors are judges, law school faculty, partners in firms and others who can be there to lend some advice or encouragement along the way," Willborn said. "Ideally they can stay in touch by e-mail and in a couple of years when the students are applying to law school or looking for advice, the mentors can be there. I didn't have that when I was an undergraduate. I didn't know who to call. This will be a valuable resource."

Coursework and seminars included legal writing and LSAT prep, study skills, professionalism, application process, and one-week mini-courses on civil rights, discrimination, retirement security, and American Indian Religious Freedom and the First Amendment. The students also had social events, receptions hosted by groups like the Midlands Bar Association, and outings to the Henry Doorly Zoo and Sheldon Memorial Art Gallery, where they chatted with University Chancellor and former law Dean Harvey Perlman. Nebraska Supreme Court Chief Justice John Hendry hosted them at a tour of the state Supreme Court.

“It was invigorating for all involved,” Willborn said. “The students are eager and happy to have this opportunity, and very motivated. We've enjoyed meeting and working with the students. It's been a great summer.”

Generous Bequest Funds New M.S. Hevelone Professorship

The College of Law has announced the establishment of a new professorship at the College, the M.S. Hevelone Professor of Law. This professorship will be awarded annually to a faculty member engaged in active research.

The new professorship was made possible by a generous bequest from the estate of Maurice S. Hevelone, a 1928 graduate of the College. Mr. Hevelone passed away in 1987. The College received his generous bequest last year, after his wife Dorothy G. Hevelone passed away. Hevelone was active in civic affairs, generous and public spirited. He was a member of the University of Nebraska Foundation, served as president of the University of Nebraska Alumni Association and made generous contributions over the years, not only to the Law College, but also to the Wick Alumni Center and to local projects in Beatrice.

Client Counseling Team Wins Regional Competition

In 2003, for the sixth time in the last eight years, the College of Law Client Counseling team won the regional competition and qualified to compete in the national competition at Stetson University School of Law in St. Petersburg, Fla. The team of Aleta Allen and Todd Hepler first had to win the local College of Law competition before going on to beat six other teams from five law schools at the regional competition held at the College of Law. While they did not qualify for the final round in the national competition, Allen and Hepler, who competed as second year students, will try again this year.

Both found the experience rewarding. Said Hepler, “We had no idea how much work would be involved. We spent many hours in the new library study rooms discussing, debating and revising our interview model. Once we won the school competition, it was a big honor and a big responsibility to represent the Law College in the regional and national competitions, especially since the College has consistently sent so many teams to nationals.”

Hepler added, “Of all the skills and theories I have been taught in law school, client counseling is one of the most practical because I know that regardless of what substantive area of

Students Receive Awards For Excellence in Legal Writing

Tara Scholz, ’05, has been named the 2003 recipient of the Silver Quill Award. The award recognizes the importance of legal writing in a lawyer’s career. Each year the Nebraska State Bar Foundation presents this award to the first year law student with the best overall performance in Legal Writing. The award carries a $500 honorarium, which is presented at the State Bar Foundation’s annual banquet.

Bren Chambers, ’05, and David Drew, ’05, won the 2003 Gross and Welch Award for Excellence in Written Advocacy. The award is presented each year to the first year students who write the best briefs in the College’s first-year Legal Writing Program. The Gross and Welch Award carries a stipend of $1,000.

The 2003 winners of the Richard D. Simmons Nebraska Practice Writing Competition were Stephanie Frost, ’04, and Karin Iossi Anderson, ’03. The award is given to the writers of the best student papers of significance to the general practice of law in Nebraska. Frost won the $500 first prize for her paper, “Larsen v. D B Feedyards: The Abrogation of the Agricultural Exemption in Nebraska Workers’ Compensation.” Anderson won the $250 second prize for her paper, “Proposed Uniform Identity Theft Act – A Possible Improvement to a Rapidly Growing Problem.” They received their prizes at the Law College alumni lunch on October 22, 2003.
the law I finally decide to practice in, I will be interviewing and counseling clients.”

Allen also thought that the competition was a great experience. “It taught me practical skills I wouldn’t have learned in the normal course of study at the Law College. The opportunity to hear comments and recommendations from attorneys and judges was the most valuable part of the competition for me.” Both Allen and Hepler expressed their appreciation for the many people who helped with the competition including Professor Craig Lawson who served as the team’s coach, the lawyers and judges who volunteered to help judge the competition, and their fellow law students who agreed to serve as clients in their practice sessions.

For Hepler, the competition had an added benefit. “I entered law school not having any interest at all in criminal law,” he said. “That changed significantly after participating in last year’s competition, which focused on criminal law. It opened my mind to an area of law I had previously excluded.”

Indian Legal Education Forum Focuses on Gaming Activities

“The Work of the National Indian Gaming Commission” was the subject of a panel discussion held at the College of Law on February 21, 2003. The panel was a featured event of the College’s American Indian Legal Education Forum, which promotes the importance of a legal education for Native Americans.

Philip N. Hogen, chairman of the National Indian Gaming Commission, opened the panel with a brief overview of Indian gaming. Indian gaming, he explained, was “off and running” after a 1987 U.S. Supreme Court case that held that Indian tribes have the exclusive right to regulate gaming activity on Indian lands if the gaming activity is not specifically prohibited by federal law and is conducted within a state which does not, as a matter of criminal law and public policy, prohibit such gaming activity. Thus, if a state allowed Bingo in church basements on Saturday nights for limited prizes, a tribe could offer much larger and more frequent Bingo gaming.

In 1988, Congress passed The Indian Gaming Regulatory Act, which created three categories of Indian gaming. Class I consists of traditional forms of Indian gaming, social games solely for prizes of minimal value. Its regulation is strictly left up to the tribe. Class II is for Bingo and pull tabs and similar games where if someone wins, others lose, but the house does not win. Tribes may sponsor such activities if the state permits similar activity by any person or entity for any purpose. Class III consists of all other gaming activity, basically casino-type games, which are only permitted if authorized by a compact between the state and the tribe.

Hogen went on to describe the various regulatory activities undertaken by the commission including background investigations, annual audits, the review of management contracts and assuring that the games are conducted fairly.

Next Harold A. Monteau, a partner in the law firm of Monteau & Peeples, LLP and a former chair of the National Indian Gaming Commission, spoke about the progress Indian tribes have made in regulating their gaming operations and how important gaming is for the tribe’s economic development.

The final speaker was Thelma Thomas, manager of the Ohiya Casino for the Santee Sioux tribe. She told about the tribe’s attempt to enter into a gaming compact with the State of Nebraska. When the state refused to negotiate, the tribe opened a casino anyway "for purely economic survival" and to "reduce the 75% reservation unemployment rate." The NGIC issued a closing order, and the U.S. attorney tried to enforce the order by putting an economic squeeze on the tribe by freezing and seizing tribal accounts and issuing fines.

The tribe tried to modify its casino into a class II operation and succeed in litigation at the district court level.

(A month after the panel discussion, the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed, holding that the Lucky Tab II gaming devices installed by the casino were a high tech version of paper pull tabs and thus were Class II gaming devices.)

Thomas said that she hopes that pressure by other groups "with financial and political clout" for increased gambling in Nebraska would ensure to the tribes benefit.

- Schmid Training Program Assists Public Librarians With Their Legal Research Needs

"What is the statute of limitations on a claim against a landlord?" Attorneys may or may not know the answer to this question off the top of their heads, but they would know how to find the answer and would also know that the answer to the question may not be as simple as the questioner believes. But what if the question were asked not to an attorney, but to a librarian at one of the state's public libraries? Would the librarian know how to handle an inquiry such as this?

It was with these questions in mind that Schmid Law Library Director Richard Leiter and Sandra Placzek, the library's head of public services, developed a training program for public librarians on basic legal research and law collection development. According to Leiter, "The program was conceived by us to address the need that public librarians have to be able to handle legal reference questions from their lay patrons. Many public librarians are not trained in legal bibliography or legal research and consequently are ill-equipped to either handle reference questions or make educated decisions about what materials they should be purchasing for their collections."

- Redlich Reflects on Warren Commission

"For ten intensive months," recalled Dean Norman Redlich during his talk, "Reflections of a Warren Commission Lawyer," J. Lee Rankin, general counsel to the commission and Redlich, assistant counsel, "shared the experience of conducting with others, what was probably the most exhaustive investigation of any crime in American history," the assassination of President John F. Kennedy.

The commission investigated two principal issues - what actually happened in Dallas on November 22, 1963, and whether there was a conspiracy. It was possible to answer the first question - the commission concluded that Lee Harvey Oswald fired the shots that killed President Kennedy and wounded Governor Connolly of Texas. As to the second, the commission could only report that it found no evidence of a conspiracy.

It was clear from fingerprint and other evidence that Oswald fired the shots from the Texas Book Depository. A major question was whether there were only the two shots from the building or whether a third shot had also been fired. The commissions findings rested on the "single bullet theory" - the idea that the second bullet both hit the president in the neck and then lodged in Governor Connolly. After endless hours viewing the Zapruder film and staging a reenactment, the commission members were convinced that this is what indeed had happened.

Redlich said that he believed that "there was no credible evidence of a conspiracy." Many people, he said, have a hard time accepting this because they find it hard to believe that "a complete zero like Lee Harvey Oswald could have killed President Kennedy."

In his subsequent tribute to J. Lee Rankin, Redlich said that Rankin "imbued the entire staff with his high sense of integrity, dedication to the truth, complete accuracy and thoroughness." He said, "No investigation until that time had ever published the full documentation of the facts on which it relied. It was clear to all of us that Lee Rankin would never tolerate an assertion that could not be fully documented." He added that Rankin "bitterly resented the phony theories and blatantly false assertions of those who in subsequent years used this tragedy of a presidential assassination to enrich themselves."
The half day programs were advertised and marketed through the Nebraska Library Commission. Three sessions have been held in Lincoln and one in Scottsbluff with another Lincoln session planned for March. According to Placzek, “The programs have been very well received, and we’ve been getting positive feedback from the exit surveys.”

Among the topics covered in the program are how not to be put into the position of giving legal advice, when to make referrals to the law library or other sources, the Nebraska and federal court system, the legislative process, and the kinds of materials that are available online and in print.

Placzek said that the print materials that are provided with the program have helped public and university librarians make educated decisions about what legal materials they should add to their collections. She added that the library plans to put those materials in a book format and make them available to librarians unable to attend the program.

The Many Faces of Roscoe Pound

Roscoe Pound, the College of Law’s illustrious former dean, has seen many things in the years that his bust has guarded the entrance to the Schmid Law Library. Roscoe has seen students, faculty and staff come and go; has seen the dress of both students and faculty grow more informal; and has witnessed the advent of new technologies. At times, old Roscoe likes to change, too, and sport attire appropriate to events going on around the Law College and the world. Roscoe also notices the increased anxiety of students as the time for final examinations approaches. He has let it be known that not only does rubbing his nose bring good luck, but that bringing him offerings is guaranteed to lead to exam success.
Remembering Henry Grether

BY JOHN GRADWOHL
JUDGE HARRY A. SPENCER PROFESSOR OF LAW
CLASS OF 1953

Former College of Law Dean and Professor Henry M. Grether, Jr. died September 8, 2003, at the age of 83. The following eulogy was delivered by Law College Professor John Gradwohl at Grether’s funeral in Salt Lake City, Utah.

Henry Grether was a superb law professor and lawyer. His primary focus as a law teacher was always on the students to be trained and the lawyers to be informed. His primary focus as a lawyer was always on the persons and communities to be affected by the issues at hand.

I am told that some in Salt Lake City may think that Henry left home. I can assure you that Henry never really left what he always considered his “home base” – the place where he was born, well educated, well trained philosophically, worked during his time at the University of Utah (among other things, as a reporter for the Salt Lake Tribune and as a law clerk) and, most importantly, married Jane.

Henry’s law professors at the University of Utah School of Law were glowing in their recommendations of Henry’s abilities and personal characteristics. They predicted an outstanding career for Henry in legal education. One from whom Henry had taken classes before and after World War II wrote:

“He has been a student of mine in each of the courses which I teach. I have thus been afforded a good opportunity to appraise his work and his study habits and also to form an opinion of his character and his personality traits. Mr. Grether is a solid and industrious student. His mind is clear, logical and orderly.

“He has impressed me as a moral, clean-living young man with a well-integrated and pleasing personality. He is manly in his bearing and was well liked by both his fellow students and the faculty.”

Another of his law professors said:

“He is a worker. He has an abundance of reserve energy... Mr. Grether has unusual patience and reserved affability in his personal relations. He mixes well and gets on well with all persons with whom he is privileged to work.”

Lawyers, and especially law professors, are sometimes accused of exaggeration. In Henry’s case, these predictions fell far short of predicting what Henry would actually achieve throughout his professional career.

Henry was a professor at the College of Law from 1948 until 1990. I knew him first as a law professor when I was a student, later we were faculty colleagues, and between 1966 and 1976, as dean of the College, he was my boss.

Henry was dearly loved by students as one who was actively interested both in their formal legal education and in their “other lives.” He was always personally involved with many students outside of the classroom, even during his tremendously busy time as dean, when he led a difficult mission in securing funding and building a new law school facility. One prominent supporter of the College asked Henry why he wanted to spend so much time in the student lounge rather than more comfortable places in the building. Henry’s response was that ordinarily he could tell more about a student as a potential lawyer from socialization than from a final examination paper. He was also keenly interested in student “feedback” and in providing some additional individual professorial assistance on a personal basis.
In Memoriam

In the classroom, Henry always looked for entertaining methods of teaching important rules and principles. He played the record of the outlandish song, "I'm my own Grandpa," in discussing the statutes on the descent of property. He wanted to see whether the students could understand the potential legal issues of the scenario based upon their study materials. Once, a poorly prepared student who commented on the luxury of Henry's teaching from voluminous class notes was given all of Henry's books and materials, and then was questioned extensively for the rest of the hour on the issues under discussion.

It was typical of the students' high regard for Henry, and his high regard for students, that Henry and Jane were with a group of students and their spouses the evening that the Board of Regents named Henry to be dean of the College. A law student, who was also a National Guard pilot, had arranged a flight training mission so as to be able to bring live Maine lobsters back to Nebraska. The news of Henry's appointment as dean turned an anticipated friendly social gathering into a royal celebration.

Henry's ten and one-half years as dean of the College of Law was a vibrant period in the school's history. Student enrollment tripled. The number of women students increased from almost none to more than forty percent of the student body. The new law school building was funded, designed and completed on schedule and within budget. New faculty positions were filled with outstanding young professors. Graduates competed nationally for exciting professional positions. Major alumni and outside support for the Law College was developed for the first time and then greatly increased. Henry's personal touch was everywhere and he enjoyed it -- especially the initiation of a school news magazine, which must have brought back memories of his old days as a neophyte journalist.

Beyond the formal education of the law school, Henry retained a strong personal interest in his former students and a strong commitment to continuing legal education. He was one of the founders of the Great Plains Federal Tax Institute and Nebraska Continuing Legal Education, Inc., prestigious continuing legal education entities. He participated in a variety of continuing education programs, including Nebraska community programs directed toward educating non-lawyers on legal issues.

Beyond legal education and continuing legal education, throughout his career, Henry accepted many challenges to improve the law and legal system: early, as an assistant city attorney to revamp the comprehensive City Zoning Code; as a special attorney for the Nebraska Department of Roads to revise some 600 sections of state laws then filling nearly one hundred pages of the statute books; as a special attorney for the Nebraska Public Service Commission to prepare an even more extensive set of administrative rules (reportedly more than 200 printed pages); and as Republican counsel to the United States Senate Judiciary Committee, at the behest of Nebraska Senator Roman Hruska, for a study of congestion in the federal court system. Henry was a longtime member of the American Law Institute, a major national organization effecting law reform, and was a longtime Nebraska Commissioner of the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws, which designs statutory codes for enactment by state legislatures.

Among many other activities, Henry served as an elected member of the Executive Council of the Nebraska State Bar Association, a position normally filled by practicing lawyers; a trustee of the Rocky Mountain Mineral Law Foundation; a consultant to a bank seeking trust powers and establishing a trust department; director of an Agricultural Credit Corporation; and a popular arbitrator of labor and commercial disputes of private businesses and federal and state agencies throughout the midwest.

Steve Willborn, the current dean of the Law College, has asked me to express his deep condolences, personally and on behalf of the College of Law and the University of Nebraska, to Jane, Debbie, Trace and Sharon, and to their families. My fellow law faculty members remember Henry's last visit to the College with special warmth. He delighted his audience in the faculty lounge with personal anecdotes of the Law College over a half century period.

I also bring thoughts of condolence from a multitude of Henry's former students. It was his students who on their own initiated the chaired professorship which bears his name. They recall with affection Henry's abiding interest in his students, his professional dedication and ability and his outstanding contributions to the Nebraska and national legal systems.

Henry left the faculty of the College of Law in 1990. There remains, however, in Nebraska and throughout the world, an appreciation in generations of former law students for his personal caring as a teacher and as a person.
remembering norm thorson

by harvey perlman
chancellor, university of nebraska

college of law professor norman w. thorson died september 13, 2003, at the age of 53 after a lengthy battle with cancer. the following eulogy was delivered by university of nebraska chancellor harvey perlman at thorson's funeral.

we all expect at some point to be called upon to eulogize a friend or colleague. but for those of us at the law college who knew norm as a contemporary, jo potuto, rob denicola, bob works, steve willborn and me, as well as others, it is far too soon for us to be engaged in such an occasion. it is probably more difficult for larryberger, dick harnsberger and john gradwohl, who knew norm both as a colleague and a student. but life deals us cards we do not expect and cannot control. what remains for all of us are the memories — memories of a good man who worked hard to make the law college and the greater university better and who added to the richness of our lives.

there was norm thorson, the professional. he spent both the preparation for and practice of his profession at the university of nebraska, where he received four separate degrees. as an undergraduate he was a member of the innocents society and a regents scholar. as a law student he was order of the coif and an editor of the law review. he married his wife toni, a law school classmate. on joining the law faculty, he became a widely recognized expert in the laws governing agriculture, the environment, water and other natural resources. he was a good teacher, a published scholar and an active participant in the intellectual conversations at the law college and within the national academic community.

when legal scholarship turned to law and economics, he had the distinct advantage, about which he was fond of reminding us from time to time, of being a professionally trained economist in contrast to those of us who were clearly amateurs. he was active nationally in his discipline but was willing to put his skills and expertise to work on contemporary issues that faced nebraska. thus, he accepted the position as the first nebraska representative to the low level nuclear waste disposal commission as well as leading a major project on water policy established at the direction of the legislature. in the friendly competition for students within the law school, he held the unfair advantage of teaching the water seminar, which involved a field trip to western nebraska. as one former student recently described it, it was the only law school course that required its students to visit ole's big game bar in paxton. he also served the greater university where he was president of the academic senate, setting a standard for judgment and savvy that i now appreciate more than ever.

there was also norm thorson, the person. as jo potuto observed, the law college will most likely find someone who will do a good job filling his teaching and research responsibilities. but ultimately we cannot replace norm, not because of what he accomplished but because of who he was. i'm not sure i know anyone who could be so analytical and at the same time so impulsive. he was so analytical that he could not understand why anyone could be against the low level nuclear waste disposal facility. it was scientifically sound, presented an infinitesimal risk to human health and would provide economic benefit to the county in which it was located. he would never understand how pure emotions could drive public policy in the face of indisputable analysis.

he also turned his analytical skills to the fortunes of the husker football team. each year he selected a player on the team that, in his view, should not be playing. the player would ultimately earn a nickname consistent with his perceived lack of skill, and each week those in the faculty lounge would be treated to each flaw in that player's performance. i am told there was often heavy betting by other faculty members on which player norm would select.
When traveling, the subject that required his most careful attention was the selection of the evening’s restaurant. He enjoyed a good meal and the selection was not to be taken lightly. He would survey others’ experiences and consult numerous guide books. The results were usually wonderful and almost invariably expensive.

Yet at the same time he was impulsive. Susan and I remember a trip to San Francisco with Toni and Norm to attend a law school convention. We waited together at the luggage carousel at San Francisco airport—one of those pyramid shaped machines where the luggage is disgorged from a conveyor belt and slides down to the waiting passengers. The carousel stopped turning with none of our luggage in sight. All but Norm began looking for the customer service desk. Norm took matters into his own hands, climbed up the carousel and disappeared down the conveyor belt, setting off a flurry of alarm bells. Thankfully this was pre-9/11, and while our luggage arrived the next day, they returned Norm to us almost immediately. This memory of that trip is almost as vivid as our memory of the smell of the burning clutch as Norm took us for an afternoon drive up and down the hills of San Francisco in his rental car of choice—one with a stick shift transmission.

Norm had a passion that smouldered below the surface but could be ignited instantly. He was a person who could care deeply about ideas and issues. His first passion was, of course, his family and he made that apparent to everyone. One sensed that his second passion was the University of Nebraska, and particularly the law school.

The University played a very central role in his life, and he cared about its future. And in so many ways he played a central role in the life of the University and certainly in the lives of those of us who had the opportunity to be his colleagues. On behalf of all of us at the University and the law school, let me say to members of Norm’s family, how much we will miss him, how much we want to embrace Toni and his children as continuing members of our community and how much we are thankful that we were able to share him with you.

Development Report

The Impact of Estate Planning

As your director of development, I have the honor and pleasure of working with the finest alumni in the entire University system, those of the College of Law. Most often, I find myself working with individual alums of our College who are contemplating a major charitable gift to their alma mater. I can tell you that it's very gratifying to help these people decide upon how they can best help strengthen the College of Law for years to come.

Not only do I get to work closely with such outstanding folks who have distinguished themselves in varieties of ways, but I also get to enjoy the simple pleasure of saying “thanks” to these thoughtful and generous benefactors.

There is one category of donor, however, that we never get to thank in person. And historically, this type of donor has had by far the most dramatic impact on our institution in terms of dollars given, endowed funds established and lives impacted. I am talking about those visionary alums who remember the College of Law in their estate plans. It would not be an overstatement to say that the Law College would be a mere shell of its current self without the foresight, generosity and planning of these thoughtful individuals.

While preparing the charitable-giving portions of their estates, these people remembered how much of their success in life was attributable to the education they received here. And now, thanks to their gifts, countless others will be able to follow in their footsteps.

In my short five years here, I have seen great things done for this College and the students we serve through estate gifts. To share just two recent examples that come to mind: In 1999, Rupert Warren, ’31, left over $1 million to our Dean Henry Foster Scholarship Fund, which will help make an outstanding legal education affordable for deserving students in perpetuity. In 2002, the estate of Ivan Van Steenberg, ’34, included a $100,000 provision to establish the Hester Mary Van Steenberg Memorial Scholarship Fund. Other planned gifts to the Law College over the years have helped build facilities, endow professorships and fund various academic activities.

The Warren and Van Steenberg gifts stand out in my mind for one reason: In neither case was the Law College aware of the intentions of these gentlemen until after they were gone. When this happens, we are left with two strong feelings: overwhelming gratitude for the fact that we were remembered in such a way, but also a sense of frustration at not being able to simply say to these folks, “Thanks.”

Now, with the announcement of the largest estate gift to this College since the 1970s, (see Merle Jones story on page 16), we have yet another example of this frustration at not being able to say “thanks.”

So it is in the spirit of gratitude to benefactors like these, and to all benefactors of all dollar amounts, that we are unveiling a new planned giving program for alumni and friends of the College of Law – The Roscoe Pound Society. By establishing the Roscoe Pound Society, we will be able to recognize and thank those who are remembering the College within the charitable-giving portion of their estate plans. Joining the Roscoe Pound Society is something we would like each and every one of you to consider thoughtfully, regardless of your age.

In acknowledgment of your commitment to the College of Law, you will be presented a hand-painted miniature portrait of Dean Roscoe Pound. The portrait will become a tradition - a way of thanking those friends and alumni whose thoughtful, philanthropic planning will benefit untold future generations.

When you join the Roscoe Pound Society, you will be recognized as a member in the Law College’s annual giving report. You will also automatically become a member of the Burnett Society – an honor society recognizing all those who have recognized the University in their estate plans.

Joining the Roscoe Pound Society is very simple. Just give us a call and let us know if you have included, or are considering including, the College of Law in your estate plans. If you have any questions, please do not hesitate to contact me or the Law College’s planned giving officer, Gwen Nemec, at 402-472-2151. And please remember that the appropriate designation for estate plans, trusts, life insurance policies and life income arrangements is “the University of Nebraska Foundation, a nonprofit corporation, for the benefit of the College of Law.”

Acklie: Crete Carrier’s Trucks to Serve As ‘Rolling Billboards’ to Promote University

University of Nebraska Foundation President Terry L. Fairfield; Duane Acklie, ’55, chairman of Crete Carrier Corp.; and University of Nebraska President L. Dennis Smith unveil one of the billboards promoting the University that have been placed on the sides of five semi trailers by Crete Carrier.

Duane Acklie, ’55, chairman of Crete Carrier Corp. announced that gigantic billboards promoting the University of Nebraska will be rolling across North America on both sides of five semi trailers. Three different ads will be used, which will be seen from Canada to Mexico. “I think it’s a very good thing for the University,” said Acklie. “It will help identify across the country that the University of Nebraska is alive and well.” The creation of the designs and production of the decals for the sides of the trailers cost $36,000 and was paid for by the University and the University of Nebraska Foundation. An Indiana manufacturer put the decals on the trailers for free. They would normally cost $1,000 per trailer. Crete Carrier is not charging the University to have the ads on the trailers.

President Bush appointed Acklie board chairman of the Student Loan Marketing Association, commonly called Sallie Mae. SLMA is a government-backed enterprise that buys and resells a large portfolio of federally guaranteed and private student loans. The primary role of the board is to oversee the financial safety and soundness of the association.

The recently-renovated College of Law at the University of Nebraska–Lincoln combines form and function, creating an inspiring environment for students and faculty. The dignified warmth of the design of the building creates a sense of place that is an asset in recruiting the best and brightest students to a college that has launched thousands of successful legal careers, including those of state Supreme Court justices and luminary leaders in the nation. If you have not visited the College since its renovation, you are invited to come see for yourself why there is no place like Nebraska.

"This new facility gives us occasion to renew our commitment to justice and excellence both to those who have come before us and to the next generations of leaders in this State who will walk these halls."

—Dean Steven L. Willborn, April 11, 2003

As I give tours of the Law College to prospective students, they comment on both the functionality and beauty of the law library. They are impressed with the number of study tables and carrels as well as the numerous small rooms for study group use. They also appreciate the library's computer labs and wireless network. The M. Brian Schmid Reading Room leaves many students inspired. Prospective students understand that law school is a challenge; yet, it is easier to meet the challenge in the gorgeous, supportive atmosphere of the Schmid Law Library and the University of Nebraska College of Law.

—Denice Archer, Admissions Coordinator

The building changes are fantastic! The Reading Room windows and light wood provide an uplifting environment for studying.

—Marisol Lopez, Class of '05
In this building, a sovereign people is to be taught to administer justice so far as reason and principle may insure, not arbitrarily or in the conscious interest of any man or any class.
—Dean Roscoe Pound, December 9, 1913

I saw the ‘before and after’ at the library, and it is 100 times better now. The natural lighting makes it an inviting place to be—you want to study at the Law College! Now with all of the study rooms, it is no longer a challenge to find a place for group study.
