Classics and Religious Studies Collection Development Policy

University Libraries, University of Nebraska-Lincoln

Kathy Johnson, Liaison for Classics

Approved: CDC, December 16, 2009

I. GENERAL ACADEMIC PROGRAM INFORMATION

The Classics and Religious Studies collections support the teaching, research, and service activities of the entire university community. The primary audience is the faculty and students of the Department of Classics & Religious Studies in the College of Arts & Sciences. Its primary focus is support for the undergraduate and graduate curricula for Classics & Religious Studies. Research needs of faculty and students are supplemented through Interlibrary Loan. While the collection also benefits other citizens of the state of Nebraska, materials are not purchased with them in mind. While the collection focuses on works classified in Library of Congress call numbers B, BL-BX, and PA, research support is also provided by other areas of the general library collection, especially history.

The Department of Classics and Religious Studies combines two humanities fields of study that share common interests in text, language and history. The Department offers a BA with a major in Classics and Religious Studies (with an emphasis in either Classics or Religious Studies) and a major in Classical Languages. Students majoring in Classics and Religious Studies gain an excellent background to pursue graduate work in classical languages and literature, classical archaeology, ancient history, religious studies, literary scholarship, and other humane disciplines. In addition, the broad and humane education offered by the major serves as excellent preparation for careers in law, medicine, journalism, religion, business, and education. (2008-2009 Undergraduate Bulletin, UNL, 155)

Students majoring in Classical Languages generally go into “graduate study of the Greco-Roman world.” (155). The department also offers an M.A. in Greek and Latin, “with concentrations in either Greek or Latin.” <http://www.unl.edu/classics/grad.shtml> Courses in the department may fulfill group requirements in the College of Arts and Sciences or in other colleges. The department also offers courses that fulfill ACE general education requirements.

Latin, Greek, Hebrew, and Arabic language and literature courses are offered, as are introductory level courses in Egyptian and Coptic. In addition, the department offers a variety of Classics courses in English, e.g., "The World of Classical Greece," "Pagans and Christians in the Roman Empire," and "Classical Drama." Religious Studies classes include "Introduction to the Hebrew Bible/Old Testament," "Early Christianity," "Introduction to Islam," "Second Temple Judaism," "Science and Religion," "Religion and Reform: Utopian and Communal Societies in America," and "Fundamentalism, Religion, and Politics."

Classics and Religious Studies faculty cooperate with English, History, Art, Philosophy, Sociology, Judaic Studies, and Music in teaching interdisciplinary courses such as "Classical Roots of English Literature," "History of Christianity," "Roman Painting," "Ancient Philosophy,” “Sociology of Religion,” “Literature of Judaism,” and “Music & the Church.” They also participate in a number of interdisciplinary and interdepartmental programs, such as Medieval and Renaissance Studies.

The department's primary focus is philological and historical. Research and teaching interests in Classics are concentrated on primary texts, such as Homer, Aeschylus, Sophocles, Euripides, and Cicero. In Religious Studies, research and teaching interests are Hebrew Bible, Second Temple Judaism, early Christianity (especially Gnosticism), medieval Christian theology, philosophy of religion, Islam, Buddhism, and medieval Judaism.

As of 2009, the department faculty includes two Professors (S. Crawford, Turner); five Associate Professors (Athanasopoulos [Anthropology], Burnett [History], Duncan, Rinkevich, and Winter); four Assistant Professors (Gorman, Komarovski, Lahey, and Wood); one Assistant Professor of Practice, (Watley); and one Senior Lecturer (D. Crawford).

II. GEOGRAPHICAL COVERAGE

Classical studies cover the literature and culture of the ancient Roman Empire which encompasses Greece, Syria-Palestine, Italy, Asia Minor, North Africa, Spain, France, and Great Britain. Religious Studies covers the world, with primary focus on North America, Europe, the Middle East, and Tibet.

III. CHRONOLOGICAL COVERAGE

For Classics, high priority is given to the literature and culture of the Hellenic, Hellenistic, and Roman periods. Latin literature of the medieval period is also a priority.

For Religious Studies, high priority is given to early Christianity, Second Temple Judaism, and Medieval Christianity. Other priorities include Islam in the Arabic speaking world, Judaism in medieval Europe, and Tibetan Buddhism.

IV. IMPRINT DATE

Imprint date is not critical but preference is given to newer titles.

V. FORMAT/TYPE AND LEVEL OF MATERIALS

Purchasing priorities for Classics:

1. Buy new facing-page translations first.
2. Buy scholarly commentaries second.
3. Buy monographs third.

Purchasing priorities for Religious Studies:

1. Buy scholarly commentaries first.
2. Buy monographs second.
3. Buy new text editions third.

Books are critical to the Classics and Religious Studies Department. In addition, symposia, transactions, proceedings, and dissertations are selectively added. These materials are acquired at the level designated by the Library of Congress Classification in the Classification and Intensity Listing section.

Reference works such as indexes and abstracts and dictionaries are also vital for research and teaching; electronic access to reference works is preferred to print when financially feasible. Non-print material, such as historical maps and atlases, are useful and are acquired selectively to support the curriculum.

More than one edition of a text may be acquired for comparative purposes. Different translations of the same original work will be acquired. Also, updated editions of classic translations are acquired.

Journal subscriptions support research and teaching in all areas of the department. Electronic rather than print journals will be acquired whenever possible, following University Libraries' policy.

Insofar as is possible, online electronic collections are preferred over CD-ROM collections. Examples of electronic collections include Patrologia Latina database, Library of Latin Texts (Cetedoc or CLCLT), eMGH, and Bibliotheca Teubneriana Latina. Caution: some of the electronic resources do NOT include the scholarly apparatus, which is available only in the print version. Before deciding to purchase only electronic content, verify whether the content will be the same electronically as in print.

VI. LANGUAGES

New editions of classical texts are collected in the original Latin, Greek and Biblical Hebrew. Primary texts in Coptic, Arabic, and Tibetan are added selectively. The order of preference for scholarly works is English, followed by German, French, and Italian. No language is excluded if the work is important. New translations are acquired selectively.

VII. SPECIAL FACTORS

Collection development activities are coordinated with those of history, art history, architecture, Judaic Studies, Medieval and Renaissance Studies, and philosophy.
