Dear Alumni and Friends,

The Law College is going through two important transitions, and you will see evidence of both of them in this issue.

First, we are continuing to work on our facilities to prepare them for the next generation of students and scholars. McCollum Hall was initially constructed three decades ago, and it has been a remarkably versatile and durable facility. But, yes, those chairs in the pie rooms really are 30 years old, and it does not take an interior designer to determine that the red carpets still present in some parts of the building saw their best years decades ago. So we have been working to improve our facilities and continue to do so. The improvements include new furniture and carpets, of course, but they also include modern courtroom and teaching technologies, wireless networks, power and data outlets for laptop computers, and an array of other features that students and faculty have come to expect. This is a major transition to a new world, and a necessary one. We were not able to do it all in one fell swoop but, as you know, we completed a major portion of it two years ago and another set of major improvements this summer, and there is only one major part of the building yet to improve before we have a completely renovated facility ready for the next generation of law students. We describe all this later in this issue.

The other major transition is occurring within our faculty. As you may have heard, two long-time members of the faculty have decided to retire at the end of this academic year. Steve Kalish, who joined the faculty in 1971, and John Snowden, who joined the faculty the following year, taught their final classes as regular members of the faculty this spring. (The TRANSCRIPT will have articles about Steve and John in its next issue.) They join others from that generation of faculty who have departed in the last few years: Peter Hoffman, Norm Thorson and, sort of, Harvey Perlman. The Law College has begun to replace these faculty with a new cohort of promising scholars. Last year we had three new faculty members at the College, this year another joined us, and we have also hired one of our own graduates who will join us in August 2006, after teaching at the Cornell Law School as a visiting professor. This is a transition and it will bring changes to the culture and offerings of the Law College. But it is also a natural and, indeed, exciting part of the evolution of the institution.

But, of course, plus ça change, plus c’est la même chose. These are important changes, but they do not change our general mission. They merely help us to continue to do what we have always done: provide a rigorous and well-rounded education for our students; participate actively and productively in scholarly debates; and use the faculty’s considerable expertise to serve the nation, the state and the University.

Five New Faculty Members
Bring Variety of Experiences

A Gator fan who grew up in Gainesville, Fla. A Kansan who keeps a basketball autographed by Roy Williams in her office. A person of the water. A former Fulbright Scholar at the University of London. And soon, a farmer's son and former prison guard from Elwood, Neb.

The College of Law has added five new faculty over the past two years. They bring a wide variety of experiences and interests to the College. Some of these interests even demonstrate how open Richard Moberly is to different views (a Gator fan? A Roy Williams-autographed basketball?). But all of these faculty bring absolutely sterling academic records to their new positions, a commitment to top-notch teaching and scholarship and an eagerness to contribute their knowledge and expertise to Nebraska and the world.

Richard Moberly is the Gator fan who grew up in Gainesville. He is a graduate of the Harvard Law School where he graduated magna cum laude and was on the law review. He comes to Nebraska after practicing in Atlanta. He is beginning his second year at the College this fall teaching Employment Law, Evidence, and in the Civil Clinic. He is joined in Lincoln by his wife, Laura, and two young sons. We are eagerly watching to see what colors his boys wear on Saturday afternoons.

Colleen Medill is the Kansan who keeps a basketball autographed by Roy Williams in her office. She graduated first in her class at the University of Kansas School of Law and clerked for the Honorable Deannell Reece Tacha, chief judge of the United States Court of Appeals for the 10th Circuit (who will be a Cline Williams Jurist in Residence at the College in the spring). The College hired Medill laterally from the University of Tennessee where she won best professor and best researcher awards. She is already one of the country's leading scholars on the law of pensions and employee benefits. Medill and her husband, Steve, have four children whom we expect to wear blue during the basketball season, but who, we are confident, will wear a different and more pleasing color most of the year.

Sandi Zellmer is the person of the water. She graduated first in her class at South Dakota before receiving an advanced law degree at George Washington University. She is one of the leaders of the University's large, ambitious and very interdisciplinary Water Resources Research Initiative (which is quite a mouthful, hence the alternative “people of the water”). The College also hired Zellmer laterally, from the University of Toledo, where she had already established a strong reputation in water and environmental law. Zellmer’s husband is Randy Mercurial, who teaches at Northeast High School.

Susan Franck is the former Fulbright Scholar at the University of London. She is a graduate of the University of Minnesota Law School (magna cum laude and Order of the Coif), where she was an articles editor of the law review. She comes to us directly from the University of Minnesota where she was a visiting professor last year, but prior to that she worked for Allen & Overy in London and Wilmer, Cutler & Pickering in Washington, D.C. She teaches courses in International Arbitration, Conflicts of Law, Alternative Dispute Resolution and Mediation. It was daring of the faculty to hire a new person who shared a first name with one faculty member (Susan Poser) and a last name with another (Alan Frank). But the faculty has been living up to the challenge with nary a mistake. (OK, with only a few mistakes here and there.)

Anthony Schutz is the farmer’s son and former prison guard from Elwood. Schutz is a graduate of the Law College, where he graduated first in his class and was editor-in-chief of the NEBRASKA LAW REVIEW. Following a long-standing tradition when the College hires its own graduates, Schutz is teaching at another law school this year before returning to Nebraska. He is a visiting professor at the Cornell Law School, joining Dean Stewart Schwab there who was a Perlman distinguished visiting professor at Nebraska during the Spring 2003 semester. When he returns, Schutz will teach Agricultural Law, Land Use Planning and other courses yet to be determined.

Professor Peter Longo, a political science professor at the University of Nebraska at Kearney and a 1983 graduate of the College, is one of Schutz’s mentors. Longo has sent many wonderful students to the Law College, but Schutz is the first one to join the faculty.

These new faculty have already brought changes to the culture and offerings of the Law College. We expect more new faculty in the next few years. Who knows, maybe in the future we’ll even end up with an Oklahoma fan.
Tasha Everman is the College of Law's new assistant dean and director of career services. Everman is a 2002 graduate of the College, but seems to have spent a lifetime preparing for the position. She literally has had a world of experience in dealing with people from different walks of life and helping them make the transition to new lives.

Before law school, she was a resettlement trainer at the Phanat Nikhom Refugee Processing Center in Thailand. In this job, she prepared people who had been approved for resettlement in the United States for the new and different culture they were about to enter. Later, for four years, she taught English to children, high school students and businessman in Tauchung, Taiwan. Finally, immediately before law school, she worked for Nebraska Wesleyan University as a student life assistant and, once again, as a teacher of English to foreign students who were preparing for their new lives as American college students.

Since law school, she has clerked for Justice Kenneth Stephan of the Nebraska Supreme Court and Judge Frankie Moore of the Nebraska Court of Appeals. She has also been a mediator affiliated with the Mediation Center in Lincoln.

Everman brings great energy and enthusiasm to the position. She says that the first order of business is to make sure the office continues "without skipping a beat" so that this year's students get the service they expect and deserve. Then she plans to build on the firm foundation laid by Carla DeVelder and her predecessors. As part of her planning, she plans to visit the Career Services offices of other law schools in the region.

DeVelder has moved on to Notre Dame Law School as the school's director of career services. During her two years at the College of Law, she reinvigorated the office, was the driving force behind a new loan repayment program and worked hard to meet each student individually and to attend to their particular circumstances.

Dean Steve Willborn takes a philosophical perspective on DeVelder's departure: "Obviously, we want everyone who works at the Law College to do such a fabulous job that they get noticed by others who then want to hire them themselves. That's what Carla did during her time here. At the same time, we'd rather have them continue to do a fabulous job for us!"

If the Career Services Office is about anything, it is about transitions. At the Law College, we are all confident that the office is in good hands with Tasha Everman and we all wish Carla DeVelder the very best in her new life at Notre Dame.
The major effort to completely update and renovate the Law College's facilities is continuing. "In two or three years, I hope and expect that the Law College will have a completely modern and attractive facility for the next generation of law students," said Dean Steve Willborn. The College is well on its way to achieving that goal.

As has already been reported in the Transcript, the College has completed major portions of these improvements over the past two years. In April 2003, the College celebrated the official opening of the completely renovated and expanded Schmid Law Library, including its spectacular centerpiece, the M. Brian Schmid Reading Room. That celebration also included completion of the new Harold W. Kauffman Legal Writing Suite.

In May 2004, on a festive and beautiful spring day, the Richard S. and Catherine Stuart Schmoker Courtyard was dedicated. Over the past two summers, the renovation process has moved onto other parts of the building. During the summer of 2004, Rooms 121 and 124 were completely renovated and updated. Room 124 is the V-shaped classroom on the south side of the building; Room 121 is the Simmons Seminar Room in the southwest corner of the building. These improvements, as well as all the others discussed below, extended the beautiful wood-and-light motifs of the library to the rest of the building; included new chairs and desks; and incorporated the latest teaching technology.

The renovations to Room 124 were made possible by a generous donation by the major Omaha law firm, McGrath, North, Mullin & Kratz. In addition to its donation for the classroom, the firm also established a generous scholarship in its name. Room 124 has been renamed the McGrath North Mullin & Kratz Classroom in recognition of this generous support. Roger Miller, a senior member of the firm and 1973 graduate of the College, said that the firm was "pleased to support the Law College's efforts to continue its tradition of providing a top-notch legal education to Nebraska's youth."

This past summer, the improvements continued. Major work was completed on Rooms 122 and 125 on the south side of McCollum Hall; on Room 113, which is the large classroom, commonly called the "hanging room" because it extends over the student lounge; and on the Courtroom. The Courtroom was still a beautiful room, 20 years after its initial construction, but it had no modern courtroom technology and its furniture and accoutrements were becoming outdated.
All that was fixed with the improvements completed last summer. Finally,
the student lounge
and locker areas were updated and improved. Amazingly,
the student lounge
still contained the original furniture and, even though it had been astound-
ingly durable, it was time for an update.

The improvements to Room 113
were made possible
by very generous bequests from the estates of Maurice and Dorothy Hevelone.
Mr. Hevelone was a 1928 graduate of the College. He had a very distinguished career in Beatrice and was always a tremendous supporter of the University.
His support for his alma mater included service as president of the Alumni As-association, charter member and director of the Touchdown Club and trustee of the University of Nebraska Foundation.

Mrs. Hevelone was also tremendously
public spirited.
She had an active,
vibrant interest in the arts and was one of Nebraska's great art patrons.
Room 113 has been named the Maurice and Dorothy Heve-lone Classroom in recognition of their generous support.

A substantial contribution to these improvements was also made by generous bequests from the estates of Merle
S. and Francis C.
Jones. Mr. Jones was a 1929 graduate of the College who became president of CBS Television and a member of the CBS Board. (See the Winter 2004 Transcript for an article on Mr. and Mrs. Jones.) When the renovation of the College's auditorium (commonly called the "pie rooms" because it can be divided into three rooms like slices of a pie) is completed, a new classroom in that section of the building will be named after the Jones, in recognition of their generosity.

The pie rooms are the only portion of the building that still need to be upgraded to complete this major, multi-year renovation of the College's facilities. The pie rooms present major challenges, and the improvements will be quite expensive. But Willborn is hopeful that the College will be able to renovate them within the next two years.

But that is for the future. For now, the College has a wonderful new set of classrooms, a sparkling and technologically up-to-date courtroom and an attractive new student lounge. Willborn wants to make clear who is responsible for all these improvements. "We have only been able to do this with the great generosity of our alumni and friends, to whom I extend thanks from our current students, faculty and staff, and from all those who will benefit from these improvements over the next 20 years."
McHenry Landscapes Show

‘This is Nebraska’s Law School’

On April 8, the College of Law celebrated the unveiling of four new oil paintings created for the Law College by Nebraska artist Nadine McHenry. The paintings celebrate the Nebraska landscape and remind visitors that this is Nebraska’s law school. They also serve to bring closer together the separate buildings and wings of the expanding Law College facilities.

The reception on April 8 brought together the legal and artistic communities of Nebraska. In addition to the artist herself, the art community was represented by three directors of the Sheldon Art Gallery: Janice Driesbach, the current director, and former directors Norman Goske and George Neubert. In addition to several people from the law school, the legal community was represented by two members of the Nebraska Supreme Court: Justices John Gerrard and Kenneth Stephan.

Nadine McHenry is a significant Nebraska artist who grew up on a cattle ranch in western Nebraska and reflects that experience in her artwork. She has an intimate knowledge of the rolling hills, waving grasses and expansive skies that distinguish our state, and the rich colors and textures of her paintings celebrate this heritage. McHenry graduated from the University of Nebraska-Lincoln in art and journalism, and received a master’s degree in Education from Kearney State College. Her husband, John, is a 1973 graduate of the Law College.

The largest of the four paintings, “Getting There From Here,” hangs in the center of the Law College in the Kauffman Legal Writing Suite. Another painting, “Black Acre,” is located in the Wittmann Lounge, which is a new part of the Welpston Courtroom Building. A third painting, “Blue Skies Ahead,” is located at the top of the new grand staircase in the center of the Schmid Law Library. The final painting, “Make Hay While the Sun Shines,” hangs in the Dean’s Office.

Limerick Summer Program Gives Students Opportunity to Study Comparative Law in Ireland

During the fall of 2003, the College of Law and the University of Kansas School of Law, in partnership with the University of Limerick (Ireland), announced creation of a summer study program in Ireland. The program, which enrolled its first students for the summer of 2004, operates on the campus of the University of Limerick and offers United States law students the opportunity to take a variety of courses with a comparative law focus. Professor Bill Lyons taught in the program in the summer of 2004, and Professor John Lenich participated in the summer of 2005, teaching a course entitled Proof of Damages: A Comparative Perspective. Lyons supplied The Nebraska Transcript with this review of his experiences teaching in the program:

Initial Thoughts

Being the first to do anything creates a certain amount of apprehension. Thus, when I agreed to be the first member of the College of Law faculty to teach in the newly established summer study in Ireland program, I had some concerns about how the program would function. We recruited students primarily from the University of Kansas School of Law and the College of Law. How many students could we attract, given competition from many established summer study abroad programs? What sort of administrative support would I find at the University of Limerick?

As it turned out, most of my worries were groundless. We had 17 highly motivated students, two from the College of Law, one from the University of West Virginia School of Law and 14 from the University of Kansas School of Law. Although the group was small, it was incredibly diverse.

The group included a medical doctor who had escaped from Pakistan several years ago during a time of great political turmoil, a student who grew up in Bosnia, two Hispanic students and a black American. The diverse backgrounds of the students greatly enhanced the discussions in the class that I taught. The Faculty of Law at the University of Limerick provided marvelous administrative and collegial support. There were a few inevitable problems, but faculty and students alike returned to the United States with an overwhelmingly positive story to tell.

The University of Limerick Campus

Because physical location does make a difference to students and faculty, my initial reaction to the possibility of teaching in Limerick was ambivalent. I'm of Irish descent, had heard stories about the sad state of Limerick and had read Frank McCourt's book, Angela's Ashes, a memoir about growing up in poverty in the slums of Limerick. Once I arrived in Limerick and had walked many miles in Limerick City and its environs, I realized that whatever Limerick's past, it is now a very livable city.

The University of Limerick, located on the Shannon River several miles outside of Limerick City, is relatively new. Founded in the 1960s, the university has developed quickly into a major Irish academic institution. The campus incorporates significant green space, including beautiful gardens and a walking trail along the Shannon. The classrooms we used were modern and offered everything the three faculty members required. As seems to be true of all newer buildings, keeping an even temperature was sometimes an issue, so the students and I quickly learned to dress in layers, giving us the ability to respond to temperature changes. The university library's physical book collection is small in comparison to the collection of most research universities in the United States. The physical collection of law books was, in relation to what we have at the Law College, very small. However, as the University of Limerick librarians explained, they use on-line research resources as an alternative to an extensive physical book collection.

The social center of the campus was a pub called The Stables that served breakfast, lunch and supper. Although the pub seldom had live entertainment (a staple at most of the pubs in Limerick), it provided a comfortable place for faculty and students to meet.

Teaching a Comparative Law Course

Although I try to include comparative law material in the courses I teach at the Law College, of necessity such material is only a small part of what we cover. Teaching Comparative Estate Planning in this summer program was a wonderful opportunity to explore issues I can only mention in the usual law school course. We began our class with an exploration of the civil law concept of the “legitime,” a forced statutory share of a decedent’s property set aside for the decedent’s children. Although Louisiana retains a limited statutory forced share for children, no other United States jurisdiction has such a rule. Indeed, the general rule in this country is that it is very easy to disinherit children. In contrast, in civil law countries such as France, disinheritting a child is difficult if not impossible without the child’s consent. This topic provoked good class discussion about the social and cultural reasons for the differences between United States law and civil law both in this specific area and in general.

Following the comparative estate planning theme, I covered a number of topics, including recognition of durable powers of attorney, recognition of trusts, validity of spendthrift trust provisions, ability of beneficiaries to modify or terminate trusts and validity of purpose trusts. The students were surprised to find that many of the estate planning tools that we take for granted in the United States either are not recognized or are severely limited in civil law countries. For example, civil law countries generally do not recognize the trust and its essential element, the splitting of ownership of property. We also had good discussions on points on which English and American law diverge, such as whether to recognize spendthrift trusts and the extent to which a testator or settlor should be able to control property from beyond the grave.

Excursions

The program included a trip to Dublin to tour the Four Courts, a major center of legal activity in Dublin. Construction of the original building, designed by James Gandon, Dublin's most famous 18th century architect, began in 1786 and ended in 1802. Although it escaped damage in the 1916 Rising, the building suffered extensive damage during the Civil War of 1922-1923. In April 1922, soldiers of the Irish Republican Army seized control of the building. When they refused to surrender, the provisional government shelled the building. Restored in 1932, the Four Courts building now houses a number of judicial offices including the High Court of Justice, the second highest court in Ireland. Our tour of the Four Courts included a presentation by a Barrister and the opportunity to sit in on court proceedings.

In addition to the formal trip to Dublin, the students took advantage of relatively inexpensive bus and rail travel to visit other parts of Ireland. Some of the students used weekends to travel to Europe.

Professor Ray Friel of the University of Limerick Faculty of Law and his spouse generously opened their home in Birdhill, County Tipperary (several miles outside of Limerick) for an informal Fourth of July celebration. We spent a good part of the day there, enjoying good food and a lovely day in the country. Although we had rain at some point during a majority of the days we spent in Ireland, the weather cooperated nicely for this outing.

Concluding Observations

The initial offering of this summer study program was a very positive experience for faculty and students. The students, although from different schools and widely differing backgrounds, quickly formed a cohesive and supportive group. They studied and traveled together and have stayed in close touch with each other since returning to the United States. From my perspective, the program was wonderful from many perspectives, including, but certainly not limited to meeting and getting to know many of the members of the law faculty at the University of Limerick, teaching a comparative law course for the first time and getting to know a great group of students, most of whom I would otherwise never have met.
Harris: ‘Why Plessy v. Ferguson Is Still Good Law’

BY SUSANNE NOVAK

Law students are taught not to rely upon holdings of overruled cases. Winthrop and Frances Lane Foundation lecturer, Angela P. Harris, professor of law at Boalt Hall School of Law at the University of California-Berkley, attempted to challenge students to do just the opposite in her presentation “Why Plessy v. Ferguson is Still Good Law.”

Acknowledging that Brown v. Board of Education overruled Plessy on the point that racial segregation violates the Equal Protection Clause, Harris focused on three related areas, which, she argued, were left untouched by the overruling: The divide between legal and social equality, the concept that race is a natural and not a social fact and, finally, the use of racial classification by the government to define what people pose a threat or are potentially criminals.

In approaching the difference between legal and social equality, Harris argued that Plessy held that in the social realm the Constitution does not protect anyone from racial discrimination. Rather the Fourteenth Amendment requires equality before the law. This equality can be satisfied by state action that separates the races but does not elevate one race above another. Harris noted that Brown v. Board of Education did not completely overrule Plessy in that regard. Rather, the distinction between societal and legal discrimination still exists because legislatures are not allowed to address societal discrimination with effective affirmative action programs.

Moreover, Harris argued, despite Brown, there is still the problem of economic justice – discrimination effectuated by the market. Failing to recognize the effects of private discrimination in the labor market continues to shield the effects of white supremacy.

Harris also contended that the Plessy construction of race as a natural fact continues today. As support, she noted the Supreme Court’s tendency to describe race as well as gender as immutable traits so that all racial identities are the same and all racial distinctions are prohibited whether for good or bad reasons. The Court’s holdings in voting support her theory, as a majority of the justices insist that race is a meaningless biological category.

The last aspect of Plessy that Ms. Harris argued remains good law is the deference given to the government to use racial classifications reasonably to preserve public peace and good order. Instead of being overruled by Brown, Harris believes there has been a shift in what is considered reasonable. Harris argued that this position manifests itself through racial profiling. On a national level race, ethnicity and religion are part of the profiling effort designed to increase national security in determining who poses a threat. On the local level, law enforcement officials are able to use race as a factor in deciding who to stop for investigation of crimes as long as they are able to articulate a colorable objective justification for the stop.

Students, faculty and others participated in discussion following the conclusion of Harris’ lecture, meeting the ultimate goal of the Lane Lecture program of facilitating understanding of and compliance with the law, promoting the study and research of law, as well as the diffusion of knowledge of the law. The Lane Lecture funded by the Winthrop and Frances Lane Foundation, established in the name of Omaha attorney Winthrop B. Lane and his wife Frances. Previous Lane lecturers at the Law College include professors Deborah Rhode, Kent Greenawalt, Robert McCrate, Judge Abner Mikva, and National Public Radio correspondent Nina Totenberg.
Congratulations,
Class of 2005!

Members of the College of Law's Class of 2005 received their J.D. degrees on May 7, 2005, at a ceremony held at the Lied Center for the Performing Arts.

The commencement address was delivered by Fred D. Gray. After Gray received his law degree from Case Western Reserve University in 1954, he returned home to Montgomery, Ala. He was the first African American president of the Alabama State Bar Association and in the summer of 2004 received the American Bar Association's Thurgood Marshall Award in recognition of his distinguished career as a civil rights lawyer.

Among his many accomplishments in his notable career, Gray represented Rosa Parks when she was arrested in December 1955 and was one of the organizers of the Montgomery Improvement Association, which organized the Montgomery Bus Boycott. Gray filed the lawsuit that lead to the Supreme Court's decision in Galye v. Browder, which struck down the Montgomery bus segregation ordinance. Gray also represented the victims of the infamous Tuskegee syphilis project. He was one of the first two African Americans elected to the Alabama legislature since Reconstruction.

Morgan A. White, president of the Class of 2005, delivered remarks on behalf of the class. John O. Sennett, '72, president of the Nebraska State Bar Association, and John V. Hendry, '74, chief justice of the Nebraska Supreme Court, welcomed the new graduates to the legal profession.

Jeffrey B. Kadavy, '02, sang The National Anthem. Processional and recessional music was provided by the Plymouth Brass.

Rosales Leaves Law College
With Mission To Help Others

BY SUSANNE NOVAK

This article features one of the students who graduated with the Class of 2005.

Alisa M. Rosales was the 2005 recipient of the Woods & Aitken/Alumni Council Outstanding Student Award. The award recognizes students who exemplify the qualities of loyalty, service and achievement at the College of Law.

Alisa’s involvement at the Law College includes serving on the Chancellor’s Commission on the Status of Women, acting as a student liaison to the Family Law Section of the ABA, serving as the co-lieutenant governor of diversity for the Eighth Circuit of the Law Student Division of the ABA, serving as an ex-officio member of the Executive Committee of the Young Lawyer’s Section of the Nebraska State Bar Association, presiding as president of the Multicultural Legal Society and presenting arguments on behalf of the College at the first National Animal Advocacy Moot Court Competition.

THE NEBRASKA TRANSCRIPT interviewed Rosales following her graduation.

What is your background?

I grew up in Ralston, Neb., attending Catholic and public schools, the eldest of two children, with a multitude of cousins. I’m a first generation college graduate, but I don’t remember ever thinking that I wouldn’t go to college. It was expected of me and my younger brother. When I was at the University as an undergraduate, I was involved with the founding of LUPAE (Latinos United in Pursuit of Academic Excellence) and teaching sexuality classes at the University Health Center. I kept changing my major, so after four years, I ended up leaving with two majors and three minors! I worked at ShopKo and then Qwest Communications before returning to law school.

Why do you think it is important to contribute to the Law College outside of the classroom?

I’ve always enjoyed being involved. I try to be involved with activities for which I have some degree of passion. I also work to make sure that everyone who wants his or her voice heard is given that opportunity. I was raised in a family that constantly volunteered, and still does, so I was instilled with a sense of obligation to give of my time and talents in a way that creates a stronger community. Taking part in activities outside the classroom is important because this is what I intend to continue to do after law school. As lawyers, we have tremendous potential to impact our communities through leadership opportunities.
Personally, I feel called to use the skills and talents I have developed during law school to help our communities become stronger.

What are your thoughts about your years at the Law College?

These three years have been the beginning of a fantastic opportunity. I have made the best friends of my life, been inspired to make the most of my abilities to enhance the legal profession and the lives of my clients, and begun a vast network of connections that I plan to continue to cultivate throughout the rest of my life. Though it has been frustrating sometimes, the realization of how much my perspective and thought processes have changed absolutely stuns me. These three years have enforced my values of serving the greater good and I can't wait to become a productive alumnae of this University. I may not be able to afford to have my name ever added to a wing, but I do hope to pay forward all the support and assistance others have provided me. We are so lucky to have alumni who care about our success and give of their time and talents without complaint or reward, just to see that the next generation of lawyers is prepared and ethical.

How has your involvement enhanced your Law College experience?

By being involved, I have begun to realize how the actions of lawyers affect people every day. Some people are afraid of the courthouse because they don't understand the legal processes or they don't see enough, if any, faces that they feel they can identify with. I feel as if I will be leaving with my Juris Doctor, an accomplishment in and of itself, and a sense of mission to give my time and talents to others to strengthen our society. My involvement also helped me see the ways that attorneys affect society outside the traditional practices of law, which helped me in developing and accepting the leap of faith it took to pursue my Master of Public Service.

What are you doing now that you've graduated?

I am a member of the inaugural class at the Clinton School of Public Service, so I'm living in Little Rock. I took the Missouri bar, and I was recently sworn in. I had planned on pursuing a career with the Missouri State Public Defender, which is still a possibility, but I'm trying to keep my options open. I'm going to continue to work on diversity and mediation issues with the ABA Section of Family Law and volunteer with the new community mediation center that has been recently founded in Little Rock. After I receive my Master of Public Service, I don't know what I'll do for sure. I could practice, try to work for a professional bar association or maybe even work as an executive in the non-profit sector. I believe this experience will give me great exposure and skills and opportunities that I haven't realized yet, so I'm trying to keep an open mind. I've already met great minds such as Charles Ogletree, Suzanne Morse and Gillian Sorenson, and I will be meeting John Edwards, Bill Clinton and John Lewis by the end of the semester. We're averaging two to three speakers per week, so we've been busy, but we're engaging our minds to try to address policy and social issues, and how we can be agents of change to address those issues. It's extremely challenging, extremely terrifying and extremely exhilarating all at the same time!

What was the most meaningful experience out of the many activities for which you have been recognized?

The experience of working within the 8th Circuit Law Student Division has been the most powerful because it gave me an opportunity to push aside barriers and open the discussion about diversity. Diversity is often seen as a discussion about affirmative action, but that has never been my focus, and I have been able to help people understand why diversity in the profession is important and show them why the ABA as a whole has embraced diversity as a value. In light of Hurricanes Katrina and Rita, and the volunteer work I was able do in Little Rock with the Red Cross day shelters, I've been renewed in my enthusiasm to discuss racial issues. I think our country has come a long way in terms of combatting discriminatory practices, but I feel that there is still a lot of ignorance out there regarding institutionalized racism and poverty. We talk about equality of opportunity, yet American children don't receive equal educational opportunities—we need to look at why that is at the systemic level.
Family Tradition Ceremony

Fourteen Graduates, Family Members Honored

At its 2005 graduation, the College of Law continued its recent tradition of recognizing the significant contributions that family loyalty makes to the Law College. At the Family Traditions Ceremony prior to the graduation, 14 graduates were joined by family members who had also graduated from the Law College. The alumni were each presented with a plaque in the shape of the state of Nebraska with their names inscribed alongside the name of their current graduating relative.

In Brief

■ Duff: Rehnquist's Legacy Is Restoration of Federalism

James C. Duff, managing partner of the Washington, D.C., law firm Baker, Donelson, Bearman, Caldwell & Berkowitz, and former administrative assistant to the Chief Justice William Rehnquist, spoke October 29, 2004, at the Law College. Duff graciously offered to speak in the absence of Rehnquist who was unable to attend due to his diagnosis of throat cancer.

Duff praised the chief justice as a “family man” possessing a “wonderful and rare combination of great intellect and common sense.” Duff noted that legal historians are likely to describe the legacy of the Rehnquist court as one where restoration of balance between state and federal power occurred.

To support his view, he spoke of the 1976 case, National League of Cities v. Usery. Rehnquist wrote a 5-4 opinion invalidating a statute passed by Congress pursuant to the Commerce Clause. The opinion concluded that Congress’ extension of federal minimum wage and maximum hour provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act to state government employees exceeded Congress’ power under the Commerce Clause and intruded on state sovereignty.

The case, although reversed nine years later by Garcia v. San Antonio Metropolitan Transit Authority, signaled that the Court was taking a closer look at Congressional exercise of power under the Commerce Clause. The Garcia case arose out of a Labor Department opinion that the San Antonio Metropolitan Transit Authority operations were not exempt from the minimum wage provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act.

Duff also noted that in 1990 the shift in the makeup of the Court revived the effort to restore and recognize the balance in federalism. In 1995, the Court confronted the issue of Congressional power under the Commerce Clause in a challenge to the Gun-Free School Zone Act in U.S. v. Lopez. The chief justice’s opinion held that the act neither regulated a commercial activity nor contained a requirement that the possession be connected in any way to interstate commerce. Five years later, the Court struck down a portion of the Violence Against Women Act in U.S. v. Morrison, using analysis similar to that which decided the Lopez case.

Duff, also addressed the recent increased attention to presidential appointments to the Court and urged reading the chief justice's book, The Supreme Court, adding that there is a very interesting chapter addressing the subject. Additionally, Duff spoke of the other books the chief justice

■ Law College SALDF Chapter Works to Protect Animals

The Student Animal Legal Defense Fund (SALDF) started as one chapter at Northwestern School of Law of Lewis and Clark College in 1993. Now more than 50 law schools have SALDF chapters for law students who are interested in animal law. Animal law is defined as the body of statutory and case law related to non-human animals.

SALDF chapters operate as an offshoot of the Animal Legal Defense Fund (ALDF). Attorneys seeking stronger enforcement of anti-cruelty laws and more humane treatment of animals founded ALDF, which boasts more than 100,000 members. ALDF focuses on protecting animals by providing free legal assistance to prosecutors handling animal cruelty cases, maintaining a database of animal abuse crimes across the country, working to strengthen state anti-cruelty statutes and educating the public through seminars, workshops and other outreach efforts.

Sarah Lierman, ‘05, founder of the College of Law SALDF said, “The area of animal law is growing and deserves further exploration and exposure. Starting a SALDF chapter at the Law College was a way to get the word out and educate students, faculty and the community about this exciting area of the law.”

The Law College’s SALDF chapter was proud to sponsor a team for the first annual National Animal Advocacy Competition at Harvard in 2004. Three students were able to compete against schools from around the country in the appellate advocacy competition. SALDF also sponsored a three-person team at the February 2005
Civil Clinic Students Help Immigrants Apply for 2006 Diversity Visa Lottery Program

Shannon Brennan, '05, and Raul Guerra, '05, while students in the Civil Clinic under the supervision of Professor Kevin Ruser, took part in an Immigration Project helping approximately 55 immigrants apply for the 2006 Diversity Visa Lottery Program. The students' help was needed because applications must be submitted on-line to the State Department. Applicants must submit selected personal and family information as well as digital photographs of all immediate family members. Because most low-income applicants do not have access to the technology necessary to complete the application, the students' help was vital.

In preparation for the project, Brennan and Guerra compiled an information packet explaining the lottery process. Nearly 200 packets were distributed to various community groups and organizations throughout Lincoln that have contact with immigrant populations. "I really enjoyed holding the clinic," Brennan said. "I think that the U.S. benefits greatly from its immigrant communities, and I was happy to have the opportunity to help people pursue legal channels of immigration."

The purpose of the lottery is to provide an opportunity for permanent resident visas, known as green cards, to immigrants from countries with historically low rates of immigration to the U.S. In order to be eligible to receive a visa, applicants must be from an under-represented country, as determined by the State Department, and possess a high school diploma or two years of work experience within the past five years in a field that requires at least two years of training experience. If an applicant is selected through the lottery, he or she still

Ambassadors Use Personal Attention to Promote Law College

During the Spring 2002 semester, a new program was created to enable upper-class law students to help shape the incoming first-year class. The program, known as the College of Law Ambassadors, helps generate awareness about obtaining a legal education while promoting the College of Law. In order to be selected to serve as an Ambassador, a student must apply and demonstrate knowledge of academic and extracurricular activities offered; exhibit excellent leadership and speaking skills and possess enthusiasm, sincerity and dedication to the College of Law.

"Admitted students often mention that the Ambassadors, through personal attention at events and through phone calls or e-mails, make the difference when choosing where they will attend law school," Denise Archer, program coordinator said. "These students also share that few, if any, of the other law schools they have applied to have current law students contact them to answer questions and alleviate concerns. The prospective students believe that this personal contact reflects the College's supportive, student-centered atmosphere and indicates that they are an important part of the future of the Law College."

Currently, there are 37 Ambassadors working to ensure the success of the program. Their duties include assisting in the recruitment of prospective students by guiding visitors on tours during visitation days and during the Fall Pre-Law Open House, the annual Open House for admitted and prospective students, Diversity Law Day for both college and high school students and Admitted Student Visitation Day. Additionally, Ambassadors take prospective students to classes with them, maintain contact with admitted students and participate in orientation in the fall.

Overall, Archer said, "The College of Law Ambassador program has been very successful in accomplishing its goals of generating awareness about legal education, promoting the College of Law and assisting in the recruitment of prospective students."

Seeking Justice:
A Clinical Professor’s Reflections
On Charging Her Bottom Line in Minor Cases

BY ALICIA B. HENDERSON
ASSOCIATE CLINICAL PROFESSOR AND DIRECTOR OF CRIMINAL CLINIC LAW PROGRAM

In keeping with a College of Law tradition, the College celebrated Professor Alicia Henderson’s tenure and promotion to associate clinical professor of law by inviting her to give a lecture based on an aspect of her research. This article is an abbreviated version of that lecture, which Henderson delivered on October 27, 2003.

I’ve been charging people with crime for 16 years now. At least half of each of my days is spent reviewing criminal charging decisions in one way or another. In my role as the director of the Criminal Clinic, I do, of course, teach my students the rules concerning charging to my students each semester.

They learn that a prosecutor’s duty is to seek justice. They learn that this is so the filing of a criminal charge is an incredible display of the power of the sovereign, which should be exercised with restraint. They also learn that it is unethical to file a criminal charge against someone unless it is supported by probable cause. We also read the Nebraska cases that say the choice of a criminal charge belongs to the prosecutor, and that, as long as the charges selected are supported by probable cause, and were not selected for some impermissible reason, such as resulting from purposeful discrimination based on race or sex, etc., that a prosecutor’s choice of charges is largely unreviewable.

Then the students enter the county attorney’s office and encounter real cases to which they must apply these rules. They think about “probable cause.” They contemplate “proof beyond a reasonable doubt.” They think about “seeking justice.” They ask what is to be gained by filing this charge. They ask, “Why?” And they want answers. And that is when it really gets exciting to be a teacher!

I’ve titled this tenure talk “Reflections of a Clinical Professor” because that is exactly what it is. What you are going to hear today are really just some beginning reflections concerning the charging of infractions and misdemeanors.

First of all, you need to know something about what I mean by “infractions” and “misdemeanors.” Infractions in Nebraska are punishable by a fine of zero to $100. Misdemeanor penalties range from zero to $1000 fine and zero to one year in jail.

In addition to these criminal penalties, it is also important to know the collateral consequences that can be imposed on people as a consequence of their “minor” criminal behavior. For instance, having a possession of marijuana conviction, which is an infraction, can get you kicked off of federal housing assistance. According to the Lincoln Journal Star, 17 families in Lincoln have lost their housing assistance since April of this year because of drug-related issues. Also, federal law provides that any student who has been convicted of possession of a controlled substance (which could be an infraction if it involves marijuana) is not eligible to receive any Pell grant, student loan or work assistance for one year for a first offense, two years for a second offense and indefinitely for a third offense.

And what happens if you are convicted of prostitution in Omaha? Apparently a new citizens group is going to be watching the court cases and will be putting your name on a billboard, even if it is your first offense and the court fined you only $100 or less. Not to mention the fact that a conviction for crimes such as theft or indecent exposure can keep you out of consideration for many jobs. Or if you are convicted of third degree sexual assault (touching of the sexual parts of someone else without that person’s consent), you must register as a sex offender. Or if you are convicted of misdemeanor child neglect, you are listed on the child abuse and neglect registry and are thereafter excluded from certain types of employment, unless you can get that indication expunged. Or if you are convicted of a crime, even a misdemeanor, involving moral turpitude, you are subject to deportation if you are not a United States citizen.

A prosecutor also has to consider the effects not only of convictions, but also of her charging decision. What effect is there on the life of a married man who is charged with indecent exposure for alleged lewd behavior with another man in a city park? What about the effect on the children of a parent who remains incarcerated because he is unable to post bond prior to a trial? Or what happens to a defendant who loses his job simply because he has been charged with a particular type of crime?

All of that is in an attempt to let you know that when I say “infraction and misdemeanor” or “minor” offenses, the consequences are not always minor.

So what, you may say. If you can’t do the time, don’t do the crime. But this is one prosecutor who believes that people can be erroneously accused and convicted. Some people, especially young people, don’t always get started off on the right foot. And sometimes the law operates too harshly, given the circumstances.

Not to suggest that I am an old softy. My students and the defense bar in Lincoln would tell you otherwise.

So this is the journey my students and I embark on every day. What does seeking justice require? When are we exerting too much zeal? When are we overcharging? When are we undercharging? When should we negotiate a plea on a case? When should we stand firm?

Now, if you want to get a prosecutor excited, accuse her of overcharging! I’ve always been curious about what was meant by that allegation, so I’ve gone looking.

A very influential article written published in 1968 for the University of Chicago Law Review by then United States Department of Justice attorney Albert Alschuler describes what is meant by “overcharging.” Horizontal overcharging, as Alschuler describes it, is when a prosecutor piles on the charges with no intention of actually seeking convictions on all of those charges. Vertical overcharging is when a prosecutor files higher charges than seem warranted by the circumstances of the case. The defense bar argues that the only reason the prosecutor files all of those charges or those higher charges is to leverage a defendant into a plea agreement, instead of a trial.

It is generally practical considerations that keep us from holding all offenders accountable for all of their detected criminal behavior. It is just too expensive to hold people responsible for all of the crimes they commit. Americans are just not willing to fund the system that they have set up. In other words, the assertion is that, without plea bargaining, the system would come to a grinding halt.

Despite this, many scholars and commentators conclude that plea bargaining should be abolished. Those commentators conclude, among other things, that plea bargains produce erroneous convictions, as well as give defendants undeserved “breaks.” Others argue that plea bargaining is something which strikes at the heart of our adversarial system. In other words, when there is plea bargaining, it is prosecutors who decide the fate of accused persons, not juries. Others argue that plea bargains are not honest because they are conducted outside of the public’s view and they don’t send a consistent message to the public about what a case is worth.

Even some prosecutors have begun to prohibit plea bargaining. One of the longest running experiments with a “no plea bargaining” policy is the one implemented in New Orleans by Harry Connick, Sr. A recent article by Professors Marc Miller and Ronald Wright sheds some light on that policy and its consequences to criminal prosecution in the city of New Orleans.

Miller and Wright say that this “no plea bargaining” policy has generally been very successful in New Orleans because it has not significantly increased the number of trials held. To what do they attribute this success? To the “hard” screening of those criminal cases. This “hard” screening consists of early, accurate assessment of criminal charges; a reasoned selection about which charges to pursue; the placement of both tangible and intangible barriers to negotiated settlements; and actual enforcement of the ban.

New Orleans did not institute this policy for minor cases, however.

Should the same “hard” screening system/no plea bargaining system be considered for minor offenses? Are there enough similarities between the prosecution of minor cases and the prosecutions of felonies to consider implementing such a policy?

First, are the same practical considerations of expense to the system at play in the prosecution of minor cases in Nebraska? I would suggest yes! Defendants have a right to a jury trial in any case for which jail is a possible penalty. Eighteen jurors are called up for voir dire at the cost of $20 apiece. After the jury is selected, six jurors serve for the remainder of the trial, which usually last two or three days. Add to that the cost of police officers being paid overtime for non-shift testimony, judge time, prosecutor time and court-appointed counsel time. Now, it is clear that felony cases have more jurors and take more time to prosecute than most misdemeanor cases, but, misdemeanor cases vastly outnumber felonies. For instance, the Lancaster County Attorney’s office filed roughly 15,000 serious traffic and misdemeanor cases in 2002. During that same year, only 1700 felonies were filed. Thus, it is still fair to predict that a sudden ban on plea bargaining in misdemeanor cases would cause a large increase in prosecution expenses if the number of trials increased in any significant way.

The second question that needs to be asked is whether prosecutors actually engaging in overcharging of misdemeanors in order to get the leverage that they need if a case is contested? Although I couldn’t prove it in any scientific way, I would suggest that such “overcharging” is even more rampant in misdemeanor prosecution than it is in felony prosecution. And, most of it is not “intentional leveraging.”

My experience tells me that given the volume of cases that a misdemeanor prosecutor encounters, she barely has time to read the police reports for a probable cause determination, let alone engage in a reasoned consideration of what justice requires. Charge what you can prove and hopefully the defendant will plead guilty at arraignment. If not, hopefully you have charged enough things that you can offer a deal at the trial setting, and that will settle the case. You can then move on to the other 20 cases you have scheduled for that trial setting, and when you get back to the office you can actually read the hundreds of cases sitting on your desk that need to be charged.

In addition to this “overcharging” due to work load, sometimes prosecutors intentionally “pile” on the charges simply as a way to communicate the seriousness of the case to the judge. After all, in the treadmill-like environment of the arraignment court, a prosecutor has to communicate that a particular case is serious somehow!

The third question to be asked is whether “overcharging” misdemeanors has significantly smaller consequences to defendants than it does in felony prosecutions. It certainly does, if one looks only at the length of incarceration. But, as I stated earlier, those consequences, both criminal and collateral are nothing to sneeze at.

Just looking the sentence differential is not sufficient, however. In felony cases, most, if not all of the defendants have benefit of the advice of counsel prior to making a decision in a case. But is that the case for minor charges? No. The vast majority of people appear in court without an attorney, and plead guilty to all of the charges that are filed, whether they have an arguable defense or not – most without an adequate understanding of what rights they have waived upon the entry of their pleas of guilty, and even more without an adequate understanding of the collateral consequences of their guilty pleas.

Now, the courts could do a better job of informing defendants of their rights, but I am not sure that the number of guilty pleas at arraignment would be significantly reduced. The fact of the matter is that many people plead to everything simply because they do not have advice of counsel. And they do not have counsel because it is expensive to hire an attorney!

So, defendants charged with infractions and misdemeanors face serious consequences, of which they are largely unaware. Their cases are “overcharged” due to lack of time and thought by prosecutors, and due to intentional message sending by prosecutors to judges. Many have no attorneys and plead straight up to multiple charges, receiving sometimes more lenient, sometimes harsher treatment than is warranted by the situation.

Remembering Don Shaneyfelt

Donald L. Shaneyfelt passed away on May 23, 2005. Shaneyfelt was a longtime associate dean and faculty member at the College of Law. He also served as interim dean of the College immediately before Harvey Perlman became dean in 1983.

Shaneyfelt’s contributions to the College were many and varied. As associate dean in an earlier era, he was practically a one-man band. He worked on admissions, helped students find jobs, set class schedules, maintained contact with alumni, determined financial aid — in effect, he covered duties that are now spread across many people in several different offices. He also found time to teach Corporations, Local Government Law, International Trade and Conflicts of Law. At least one product of his efforts is still very visible at the College of Law. During his time as interim dean, he broke ground for the Welpton Courtroom and was in charge during its construction.

Despite all these contributions, Shaneyfelt spent only half his career at the Law College. The first half of his life was spent in the military. He served in the European theatre during World War II and earned the Bronze Star, Silver Star and Legion of Merit Medal. He then returned to the University, finished his undergraduate degree and graduated from the Law College in 1950. Shortly after, he was recalled into the Army during the Korean War. In 1968, he retired from the Army as a colonel and returned to the Law College. He remained at the Law College until 1988 when he moved permanently to his hometown: Long Pine, Neb.

Shaneyfelt learned to fly after retiring from the Army, and he loved it. For a period during his time as associate dean, he would offer faculty candidates the opportunity to go up with him in his plane for an aerial view of Lincoln. He made it clear that this was up to the candidate and entirely voluntary, but candidates sometimes have an expansive view of what might affect their prospects of a job offer. So many, including some on the faculty today, got to view firsthand Shaneyfelt’s joy of flying. Shaneyfelt also clearly holds the record, and undoubtedly will always hold the record, for the longest commute to work at the Law College. During his last year at the College, he lived in Long Pine and commuted to his classes at the Law College each week.

After his years at the Law College, Shaneyfelt was a public-spirited member of the Long Pine community. He served on the school board and was a member of the American Legion and the VFW. He also flew regularly, of course; tended to his Morgan horses; played golf at the nearby Bassett Country Club; and traveled widely with his wife, D. Lynn Robertson, ’79.

Introducing Angie Hohensee and Connie Pejsar

The University of Nebraska Foundation and the College of Law are pleased to announce that Angie Hohensee has joined the Foundation and the Law College as director of development. She is assisted by Connie Pejsar, the director of sustained giving. Hohensee and Pejsar wrote these letters of introduction for The Nebraska Transcript as a way of introducing themselves to the College's friends and alums.

From Angie Hohensee:

My first thought in writing this introduction is to say thank you. Thank you to all of you who are committed to ensuring that the College of Law remains one of the finest in the nation. That being said, my name is Angie Hohensee and I am proud to represent both the University of Nebraska Foundation and the College of Law as the director of development.

My main goal is to give you a resource through which you can explore your philanthropic options, organize your contributions effectively and enable you to donate your resources of time or money to that which gives you the most impact and personal satisfaction.

After I received my degree in Journalism from the University, I took a position as an advertising representative for the Kansas City Star. Later, I moved back to Nebraska to become the director of marketing for Nebraska Educational Telecommunications. My most recent position was in private banking at Union Bank in Lincoln. I am married and have two children.

During my 15 years in marketing, I worked with tangibles and intangibles, for profits and non-profits, and public and private institutions, and have found that the foundation for all transactions is trust. The same is true in fundraising.

I take very seriously our commitment to be a trustworthy steward of your charitable gifts. And, I will help to advance your desires to sustain the College of Law as a leader in legal education.

From Connie Pejsar:

I have been with the University of Nebraska Foundation for 22 years. During my tenure, I have served as director of annual giving and started a new program for Leadership/Sustained Giving to benefit all of the colleges in helping their donors reach new levels of giving.

As director of sustained giving for the College of Law, I will coordinate the Class Agent program, class reunions and alumni events. I also will help with donor relations and work on increasing giving levels. One of my goals is to invite alumni into higher recognition giving levels at the College.

My husband, Steve, and I are Lincoln natives and have two children and one grandchild.
The Class of 1955 celebrated its 50-year reunion on June 12 and 13, 2005, at the Lied Lodge in Nebraska City. And what a class it is! For one thing, this was about the 50th time the class has held a reunion. Instead of waiting for “big” anniversaries, the Class of '55 tries to get together every year to remember good times, to celebrate each other’s accomplishments and to have some good old-fashioned fun and camaraderie.

This year, the festivities included an appearance and personal congratulations from Nebraska Governor Dave Heineman; a tour of the Lewis and Clark Visitors Center, guided by former University regent and Nebraska City mayor, Nancy Hoch; and a closing dinner speech by former Nebraska Supreme Court Chief Justice Norman Krivosha, '58. But the highlights of the reunion, as always, were the informal conversations at breakfast and lunch and the time spent together as a group remembering times together. And what remarkable memories there were!

The memories began from the class’s first years together: Memories of classes with Belsheim, Beutel, Axelrod, Dow and Lake; memories of a national moot court championship; memories of early jobs and the beginnings of marriages. The stories continue through active and productive careers: Deposing Jimmy Hoffa; exposing a completely fake expert witness; representing ConAgra; central roles with important companies, such as Crete Carrier, Northern Natural Gas and UNOCAL. Public service was clearly a deep and important aspect of their life work: several state and federal judges; several past presidents of the Nebraska State Bar Association; many, many hours of service on local school and church boards. Finally, for many, stories of well-deserved retirements with summer or permanent homes in Lincoln or Omaha, Minnesota or Montana, Pittsburgh or Los Angeles.

This was also an occasion to remember the University and Law College and to reflect on how much has changed, and remarkably how much has stayed the same. Much has changed, of course. The Class of 1955 had 34 graduates and no female graduates; the College’s most recent graduating class had 130 members, including 61 women. Tuition in 1955 was $160/year for residents and $320/year for non-residents; this year tuition and fees were about $9,000 for residents and $21,000 for non-residents. The Class of 1955 went to 10th and R to attend classes in “Old” Law, which contained 50,000 volumes with nary a computer in sight (or, indeed, hardly even imagined); now the building is on the East Campus, contains more than 350,000 volumes, and more than 90% of incoming students bring their own computers to connect to the wireless network available everywhere in the facility.

But much has remained the same, too, including the most important parts. Then and now, the heart of the first-year curriculum consists of year-long courses in Contracts, Torts, Property, and Legal Research and Writing. Then and now, the faculty was accomplished and memorable. (No doubt we will remember current faculty 50 years hence, just as we remember today people such as David Dow, Alan Axelrod, Henry Grether.

and Jim Lake.) Then and now, the curriculum extended well beyond traditional law courses to expose students to public law and interdisciplinary studies. (In 1955, this was highly innovative and widely noticed in the academic world.) Then and now, the football team, sadly, was about the same. During the Class of 1955's last year, the team won 6 games and lost 5; last year, as we all remember so painfully, the team won 5 games and lost 6.

Because things were different then, the Class of 1955 contains members who did not actually graduate in 1955. The bulk of the people in the “Class of 1955” were in the College's 2-4 program, which no longer exists. Thus, they started law school in 1951 after completing two years as undergraduates, and graduated in 1955 after four years at the Law College. But some in the “Class of 1955” were in the 3-3 program, so they began with the class in 1951, but graduated in 1954. A few others began at other times or graduated later, mainly because of the Korean War. Finally, these days, the class includes spouses of members who are no longer with us. At the reunion, this group was well represented by Marlene Otte and Jean Cambridge. The members of the class who actually graduated in 1955 were:

Sheldon Krantz, '62, may be one of the most renowned white collar criminal defense attorneys in the world. Practicing with DLA Piper Rudnick Gray Cary in Washington, D.C., he is also the founder of New Perimeter, a global pro bono nonprofit affiliate of DLA Piper, which provides legal support for projects of global concern, including health care, hunger, housing, economic development, law reform and human rights.

And he credits his education at the College of Law with providing the foundation for his success.

"I have never found my education to have put me at a disadvantage with lawyers from Harvard, Yale, the University of Chicago - any of them. My view is that my education has been equal to theirs. Wherever I've been in my professional life, I've been prepared to take on the challenges," the Omaha native said. "I take pride in having a law degree from the College of Law and being a native Nebraskan."

Krantz said Professor Henry Grether, who taught Criminal Procedure, first sparked his interest in criminal law. "It's particularly fascinating now," he said. "There's been such a focus on criminal law in the last 10-15 years."

Krantz started his legal career in the organized crime and racketeering area, moved into academic life as a law professor at Boston University, then became dean of the University of San Diego Law School. He returned to private practice when he joined Piper & Marbury to start a white collar practice group. The DLA Piper practice now has about 3,000 lawyers worldwide, the result of recent mergers. "We now have a very large white collar criminal defense group - one of the largest in the country," he said. DLA Piper now has 53 offices in 20 countries.

"We represent a lot of companies who might be under investigation for violation of regulations such as health care, environmental concerns or government contract fraud, for example. In many instances, the investigations or scrutiny might not be warranted. We assist clients in getting to the bottom of the allegations and in getting information to the government that we hope will convince a federal agency that it's going down the wrong path," he explained. "We also give preventive advice to companies so they can avoid problems. In many instances, it's the most valuable thing we do," he added.

Krantz divides his time between his private practice and New Perimeter, which provides legal support for five major pro bono projects. "We are working with the U.N. peacekeeping mission and government in Kosovo in developing a new legal system; we have been helping with the Global Fund, which is a major new initiative to provide drugs to deal with HIV AIDS, malaria and tuberculosis, and making sure the funds are not misappropriated; and we are one of three joint venture partners in creating a human rights resource center for southern Africa," he explained. There is a budget of $6 million in pro bono time for this, he added. The initial contribution is 13,000 hours of billable time from 21 DLA Piper lawyers who were selected from the 100 who applied. Each attorney is devoting 500 to 1,000 hours to one of these projects. Some even work full-time on a New Perimeter project.

"Nebraskans may be interested to know that the director of the Department of Justice within the U.N. Peacekeeping Mission in Pristina, Kosovo, is Tom Monaghan," Krantz said. Monaghan, '72, was U.S. attorney for Nebraska before he accepted this position. New Perimeter, Krantz pointed out, is assisting the U.N. Peacekeeping Mission, the interim government and the National Center for State Courts in forming a new justice system.

Krantz is pleased with his career choice. "An important message is that there have been a lot of critical things said about the legal profession, and some are justified. But there are extraordinary opportunities for lawyers, and they should never lose sight of their dreams. You can get buried in a practice you find tedious, and a lot of people leave the practice of law and pursue other things. But I am really convinced that, with a legal education, there are a lot of things you can undertake," he said.
From Chappell to San Diego, Wertzes Inspire Each Other

By MARY GARBCZ

There's a lot of difference between Chappell, Neb., and San Diego, Calif., but a father's law practice in Chappell and his son's practice in San Diego have similar roots — and a foundation of mutual admiration.

John D. Wertz and his son, John R. Wertz both graduated from the College of Law — John D. in 1942 and John R. in 1972.

"To me, it's really significant that together we're in our 100th year of being in the legal profession," said John R. Wertz in a recent telephone interview. John R. is in the firm of Sullivan Wertz McDade & Wallace, P.C.

John R. said his father was a great inspiration to him when he decided to become an attorney. "I got to see firsthand what a lawyer did, and how a lawyer could contribute to the betterment of the community," he said. "I got to watch my father's involvement as he did good things in the city of Chappell."

John D. Wertz and his law partner, Ray Smith, formed a trust for a client that has provided more than $1 million per year in funding for the community good in western Nebraska. Another trust John D. helped establish has provided substantial academic scholarships for high school seniors so they can attend college.

"My motivation for going to law school was my mother and father, and the community service they did. My mother started the Meals on Wheels program in Chappell and was instrumental in forming a lot of the senior services there. She also volunteered at the assisted living and nursing home in Chappell," John R. said. His father, John D., served on the Chappell city council and was the city attorney for five mayors.

John D. retired two years ago from the active practice of law. "If I hadn't gotten glaucoma, I'd still be practicing. It was a wonderful 54 years of practice in Chappell," he said, "and I'd do it all over again. It's a great profession."

Until he and his wife, Carol, moved into an assisted living facility in Chappell recently, he had lived in the same brick house in which he was born in 1915.

"My own father persuaded me to go to law school, even though I always thought I'd be a sports writer," John D. said. John D.'s father came to Nebraska from Pennsylvania in 1890 and established a hardware store and a lumber store. He only completed the fourth grade himself, but came into contact with a lot of legal matters in his business — contracts, leases, deeds — and felt law school was the right direction for his son.

"When I graduated from law school in 1942 (those were the days when the war was on) I'd had to double up on my classes during the last semester so I could finish and get into the service. I was drafted into the Army right away," John D. said.

Fast forward to 1972. John R. was graduating from the College of Law, and determining where he wanted to practice. "I had spent the summer in San Diego between my second and third years of law school, and the positive experience of being in the big city was one that I hadn't had before," so he decided to begin his practice there.

John R. started out his legal career in California as a civil litigator, "but now I have a very broad range of things I do. I've represented the last three mayors of San Diego and a lot of other politicians," he said. San Diego, like many other large cities, has many special interest groups. To take positive steps, litigation is often involved, as is the ballot box, and it always involves legal interests. "I've been drawn to this, and our firm is involved with the major public issues of the day," he said.

"We're also involved in entertainment and business law," he said. He's been on the board of directors of a San Diego entertainment venue for 12 years, and has helped in the legal capacity with entertainment contracts and other business. "It's basically business law with a little bit of pizzazz," he said. "It's fun to be involved in the proactive side by putting agreements together so they can be successful and avoid disputes."

2000 Alumnus, Future Student Meet in Port of Spain, Trinidad

The following note was emailed to Associate Dean Glenda Pierce, '82, from Tim Swanson, '00, on July 27, 2005:

I was working the visa line in the Consular Section at the Embassy in Port of Spain today and adjudicated a visa application for a Trinidad national, Julius Clarke, who will be studying at the Law College this year. He mentioned to me that he met you last summer at a pre-law academy, and he showed me his schedule of classes. I, of course, gave him some pointers on his professors and what to watch out for. Seeing the schedule of classes and the different professors' names again brought back a flood of memories, even though I haven't been back to the law school campus in five years . . .

Other than adjudicating visas, I've been well. I've been married for one year, but no kids yet. My wife is from Iowa and we met in Washington. I've been in Trinidad for the past year working in the visa section and will be here for one more year in the Economic section before I get a new assignment. I spent the previous two years (2002-2004) in Moscow working as an Economic officer. Going from the cold Russian winters to the warm Caribbean has been an interesting, but nice, change.

All the best,

Tim Swanson
