EDITORIAL

Editor's Message

I wish to begin my editorship by thanking David Outcalt for his gargantuan efforts in the course of giving birth to the POD Quarterly and nurturing it through its first year. As I guide it through its second year of life, I look forward to corresponding with many of you, as contributors, reviewers and readers, and in maintaining the editorial standards and policies which have been established by the Editorial Board and upheld by David.

The membership of the Editorial Board is listed inside the front cover, but I would like to detail the specific tasks each of them has agreed to carry out during the next year. David Outcalt will explore foundation support possibilities and provide on-going consultation to me; Mary Lynn Crow has developed and will edit the new "Membership News and Information" section, which appears for the first time in this issue; Sandra Inglis will be responsible for providing book reviews; Claude Mathis will monitor the research emphasis of the journal; and Robert Young will be in charge of circulation and advertising. Lance Buhl, by virtue of being Executive Director, will share all headaches with me and pay the bills. Selena Lee will be the Production Manager and assist me in all aspects of producing the journal.

Of course, none of us can adequately accomplish our tasks without the support of the membership and readership. In order to continue producing a journal which is responsive to the varied concerns, interests and day-to-day duties represented by the diversity of people who turn to the POD Network for ideas, inspiration and practicalities, we need your suggestions, submissions and, at times, your criticisms. In turn, we will do our best to make the POD Quarterly the most informative and influential publication available in this multifaceted field known as professional and organizational development.
