I. GENERAL ACADEMIC PROGRAM INFORMATION

The political science collection supports the teaching, learning, research, needs for political information, international exchanges and communications, and other related service activities of the entire university community. Its primary users are faculty, staff, and students of the Department of Political Science in the College of Arts and Sciences. Its essential focus is support for the undergraduate and graduate curricula for political science. The collection is supplemented through interlibrary loan services whenever special curriculum and research needs of political science faculty and students arise. Although the collection is not developed for the general public and community users, they may benefit from the collection for their information needs. The main focus of the collection are works classified in Library of Congress call numbers J (Political Science) and K (Law), however, curriculum and research needs of political science are substantially supported by works classified in philosophy, history, and other areas in social science.

Department of Political Science

Political science has been a part of the university since 1871 when Allen Richardson Benton, the first chancellor of the university and a scholar of law and ethics, concurrently chaired Moral Science. In 1899, the university campus witnessed the establishment of the Department of Political Economy and Sociology which was restructured to be the Department of Political Science and Sociology in 1906. Political science did not become an independent department until 1925.

After 140 years, political science has evolved and developed into a department that is committed to providing quality undergraduate and graduate education in B.A., M.A., and Ph.D. degree programs. The department offers courses in five areas of concentration: American government, politics, and law; comparative politics; international relations; political theory; and public policy, to train students for a career in government, teaching, non-profit sector, or business. The department cooperates with University of Nebraska-Omaha in offering courses leading to Master of Public Administration degree, which is granted by UNO. The department participates with other disciplines in offering courses for the Certificate in Public Policy Analysis at both graduate and undergraduate levels. As a participating department, political science offers courses in such interdisciplinary programs as African American and African studies, Asian studies, European studies, human rights and human diversity, international studies, and Latino and Latin American studies.

There are 18 faculty members in the department, with 8 full professors, 4 associate professors and 6 assistant professors. Their research interests are diverse, ranging from American Congress, American foreign policy, American politics, American presidency, Black politics, biology and politics, Chinese politics, civil liberties, comparative environmental policy, comparative political institutions, comparative politics, constitutional law, corruption, criminal justice, election and voting behavior, ethnic conflict, European politics, human rights, international conflict, international law and organization, international political economy, international politics, international relations, international security, judicial politics, legislative politics, to political behavior, political parties and interest groups, political psychology, political theory, public administration, public opinion, research methodology, science policy interface and urban politics.

Each academic year, the average undergraduate enrollment of political science major is about 300, and an average of 15 students enrolled in master's program. Currently, there are 46 students working towards Ph.D. with 15 of them in residency on campus, and the rest are ABD (all but dissertation). In 2007-2008 academic year, the department awarded 70 bachelors, 7 maters, and one Ph.D.

B.A. in Political Science

The major in political science requires 30 credit hours in political science, including the introductory course, PS100 (Power and Politics in America); one of the political theory courses: PS108, 380, 385, 483, 484, or 485; the senior-level capstone course, PS400 (Democracy and Citizenship); six credit hours from three of the following areas: American government, politics and law, foreign and comparative government, international relations, political theory, public administration and public policy; and at least nine credit hours are at the 400 level.

M.A. in Political Science

The department offers graduate study in the following areas of specification: American government; comparative government and politics; historical and normative theory; international relations; methodology and empirical theory; public policy; and public administration (in cooperation with UNO).

M.A. Option I with Thesis

This option requires 30 credit hours of course work, plus 6 credit hours for thesis, including PS800 (Research Methods) and PS801 (Scope and Methods) recommended for the first year, and three required core seminars from the following areas: American government; comparative government and politics; historical and normative theory; international relations; and public policy. For those who do not take upper undergraduate level or graduate level political theory course must take the political theory core seminar. It also requires passing comprehensive examinations in two areas of specification.

M.A. Option II without Thesis

This option requires 36 credit hours of course work, including PS800 (Research Methods) and PS801 (Scope and Methods) recommended for the first year, and core seminars in American government and one other core seminar required to be completed in the first three semesters. It requires passing comprehensive examinations in two areas of specification, as well.

M.A. Option III without Thesis, but with Promise for Success in Working towards the Ph.D.

This option, which requires 36 credit hours of course work, may be chosen only with the approval of the Graduate Committee upon recommendation of the student's advisor. It shall only be approved when there is sufficient evidence of excellent progress in the program combined with extraordinary research and writing skills demonstrating ability comparable to that required for a thesis. Its course requirement is the same as Option I, and requires passing comprehensive examinations in two areas of specification.

Ph.D. in Political Science

It requires a M.A. in Political Science or a related area; 90 credit hours with no more than 21 hours for dissertation research; passing comprehensive examinations in two areas of specification; passing PS901 in which the student will prepare and defend a dissertation prospectus; and passing PS802, Professional Development in Political Science. A student with a master's degree from another institution may take the proficiency examination, or substitute it by taking any core seminar, PS800, and PS801. The department requires a Ph.D. candidate to teach during the period of residency.

II GEOGRAPHICAL COVERAGE

Library resources are collected at the research level. Preferred geographical areas are the United States, Great Britain, Western Europe, Russia, Eastern Europe, East Asia, Middle East, Africa, and Latin America. Due to the areas of concentration, comparative politics and international relations, materials from all nations are desired. Coverage is worldwide and no area is specifically omitted. Geographical coverage is considered hand-in-hand with chronological coverage.

III. CHRONOLOGICAL COVERAGE

Top priority is given to materials about the 20th and 21st centuries, with an emphasis on recent materials, for the area of public administration. For the American government area of concentration, priority is given to the 20th and 21st centuries, and recent materials, with secondary emphasis on materials covering the 18th and 19th centuries. The international relations area of concentration requires a focus on the 20th and 21st centuries, with secondary coverage of earlier centuries. Coverage for the foreign and comparative government area of concentration is primarily on the 19th, 20th and 21st centuries, with selective coverage from prior periods. Coverage for political theory materials is not time dependent; coverage begins from Plato. It is important to collect works of historical analysis that support the relevant areas of faculty research. Additional emphasis on retrospective materials occurs when funding permits. Materials from any chronological era are collected at specific faculty request.

IV. IMPRINT DATE

Major emphasis is on current and recently published resources for all five areas of concentration. Primary source materials are collected at the research level for the areas of international relations and American government, particularly for official documents (L.C. class J). Selective retrospective purchasing for all five areas occurs as gaps in the collection are identified, as well as at specific faculty request.

V. FORMAT

Most materials are acquired in the form of monographs, reference sources, and periodicals. Most materials are in print format, while an increasing percentage of periodicals are in electronic format, and a small number of e-books are in the collection. Up-to-date reference works such as dictionaries, encyclopedias, directories, and handbooks are acquired to support this department. Dissertations are selectively acquired. The acquisition of documents from the U.S. federal government, State of Nebraska, United Nations, European Union, and Organization of American States satisfactorily supports this department's programs. Quite a few of the documents, in particular, the U.S. federal documents, can be accessed electronically.

VI. LANGUAGE

English is the preferred language of publication for all library resources collected at the research level. Materials in French, Spanish, Italian, German, and Russian are collected at the research level, especially in the areas of comparative government, political theory, and international relations. Other non-English languages are acquired at faculty request. Translations are preferred to non-English publications.

VII. ELECTRONIC DATABASES

Over the years, the University Libraries has acquired a number of electronic databases, including full-text ones, in political science and related areas: Political Science: A Sage Full-text Collection, International Political Science Abstracts, Worldwide Political Science Abstracts,

VII. LIBRARY COLLECTIONS

For decades, the University Libraries has committed to acquiring and collecting a wide range of resources to support the political science academic programs. The materials in the library collection cover the areas of American politics, government, law, public administration, political behavior, political culture, political economy, political geography, political history, political institution, political philosophy, political psychology, political thought, international politics, international relations, diplomacy, human rights, research methodology, and area studies.

The guides of some of the above-mentioned areas can be found in other collection development policies, such as History, Philosophy, and Economics.

The University Libraries is one of the regional centers of the U.S. federal document depository, and has a fairly complete set of U.S. federal government documents from executive, legislative, and judicial branches, which provide an abundant and invaluable resource for the political science academic programs. The library collection also has United Nations, European Union, Organization of American States, and Nebraska State documents.

In terms of political science resources, the library's collection is supplemented locally by University of Nebraska-Lincoln Schmid Law Library, Nebraska Commission Library, and Nebraska State Legislative Library.
