A Few Olympic Readings

Just in case you can’t get enough, here are a few more:
1. Geremie Barmé’s excerpt on Wang Shuo on Danwei is a fascinating twist on “sports competitions” and national humiliation.

2. Monroe Price has a recent piece up at the Huffington Post on internet censorship.

3. Check out this charmmingly self-reflexive piece by the L.A. Times' Ching-Ching Ni on the experience of returning to Beijing and finding the city of her childhood gone.

4. Exhausted by the Olympics already? How can you feel this way when there’s 2016 to think about?

6. Also worth a look (with nod to CDT for the tip): this satirical little news broadcast about “Are the Games a Trap,” from that trusty news source, The Onion.
