3-2-2018

Black US Army Bands and Their Bandmasters in World War I

Peter M. Lefferts

University of Nebraska-Lincoln, plefferts1@unl.edu

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcommons.unl.edu/musicfacpub

Part of the African American Studies Commons, Military History Commons, Music Commons, Social History Commons, and the United States History Commons

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by the Music, School of at DigitalCommons@University of Nebraska - Lincoln. It has been accepted for inclusion in Faculty Publications: School of Music by an authorized administrator of DigitalCommons@University of Nebraska - Lincoln.
Black US Army Bands and Their Bandmasters in World War I

Peter M. Lefferts

This essay sketches the story of the bands and bandmasters of the twenty seven new black army regiments which served in the U.S. Army in World War I. The new bands underwent rapid mobilization and demobilization with their regiments over 1917-1919. They were for the most part unconnected by personnel or traditions to the long-established bands of the four black regular U.S. Army regiments that preceded them and that continued to serve outside Europe during and after the Great War. Pressed to find sufficient numbers of willing and able black band leaders for these new regiments, the Army turned to schools and the entertainment industry for the necessary talent. The newly formed bands entertained servicemen and civilians in Europe and America not only with traditional military marches and concert band fare, but also with minstrel shows and revues, and with the latest flavor of ragtime music, which they called jazz.

The most important aspect of this story is that it provides a context---including colleagues and competitors---for the wartime and immediate post-war accomplishments of James Reese (Jim) Europe. The story of how Jim Europe and the “Harlem Hell Fighters Band” introduced jazz to Europeans during World War I is one of the most famous set pieces in American music history, and his murder shortly after their return to the states is one of its great tragedies. There is no denying his fame and accomplishments, but Lieutenant Europe was not an isolated figure. Rather, he was first among equals. He was one of a number of freshly minted black U.S. Army band leaders, some of whom who also had been famous civilian musicians in their own right, who brought large and small ensemble jazz to England and France in 1918-1919. A small number of these new black bands, after the Armistice, toured the States to capitalize swiftly on their moment of fame and the surging popularity of the new jazz music.

MOBILIZATION FOR WAR
The U.S. Army’s four regular black combat regiments, actively occupied elsewhere, did not see service in Europe during World War I. Rather, 27 new regiments for African Americans were mobilized in 1917-1918, and there was not a great deal of crossing over from the older outfits to the newer. Eleven of the new units were U.S. Army combat regiments, comprising the 92nd Division (seven regiments, three of artillery and four of infantry) and the 93rd Division (four regiments of infantry), although in fact the units of the 93rd ended up fighting with the French Army under French command. The remainder of the 27 regiments were the sixteen so-called Pioneer Infantry Regiments 801-816, of which all but 810 and 812 served overseas. These Pioneer Regiments consisted of non-combatant black troops who worked as stevedores, dug trenches, graves, and latrines, and built hospitals, roads, bridges, and railroad lines. In addition, other units of the U. S. Army’s Service of Supply were manned by African Americans, and they brought their bands to the docks and depots at far remove from the trenches.

All of the 27 new combat and Pioneer infantry regiments were eventually able to establish regimental bands, and with one exception (James Riley Wheelock, a Native American), these new black bands all were conducted by black conductors. Bandsmen were assigned to their regiment’s Headquarters Company.

Appendix I of this paper presents the names of the Band Leaders and Assistant Band Leaders that I have been able to determine for these units, along with the names of some of the other individuals on the band leadership teams. To make sense of such a mass of mostly unfamiliar names, we must begin with the realization that the talent pool of black musicians eligible, available, and willing to enter the army as bandmasters was not large. Some of the units quickly were able to build distinguished bands under experienced leaders. But because the number of qualified conductors was so small, the army had to cast

---

1 During the war, the Ninth Cavalry served in the Philippines, the Tenth Cavalry and Twenty-Fourth Infantry served in Arizona on the Mexican border, and the Twenty-Fifth Infantry served in Hawaii.
2 See Appendix I.
3 Not all the bands were able to be formed in the US. The band of the 805th was organized only in January 1919 in Europe (Paul S. Bliss, Victory: History of the 805th Pioneer Infantry, American Expeditionary Forces (St. Paul, Minn.: the author, 1919), pp. 207-209; see also Addie W. Hunton and Kathryn M. Johnson, Two Colored Women with the American Expeditionary Forces [NY: Brooklyn Eagle Press, 1920]), p. 223. The St. Nazaire band also only got its instruments in Europe (Hunton and Johnson, p. 222-23). its net fairly wide, catching everyone from regular army men, national guard bandmen, members of the educational community, and seasoned veterans of the entertainment industry, to neophytes just out of college.

Age was one significant factor that worked against a cohort of active, senior, nationally prominent African-American musicians born from the later 1850s into the early 1870s---already in their forties and fifties and thus above draft age---who did not serve as military musicians in this war.\(^4\) Except for Elbert B. Williams (b.1864), George E. Dulf (b.1872), and James Riley Wheelock (b.1874), all the bandmasters of the newly activated regiments were relative youngsters, men in their twenties and thirties born from around 1880 to around 1895. The primary leaders of the greatest combat regiment bands were born around 1880-1885.\(^5\) Less prestigious but still often mentioned were the bands led by men born around 1885-1890.\(^6\) The best of the hurriedly assembled and drilled bands of the Pioneer Infantry regiments were, naturally enough, those prepared by their two most senior bandmasters, who were the only two to make Lieutenant: James Riley Wheelock (b.1874) and Will Vodery (b.1885). Most of the pretty green Assistant Band Leaders in the Pioneer Infantry regiments were born between 1889 and 1895.\(^7\)

The majority of bandmasters had worked previously in more than one professional arena. Those with prior army experience, and who thus were familiar with military drill and other customs, were few. Elbert B. Williams, the first officially approved black army bandmaster of the original “quota of four,” was a veteran with twenty-nine years of service. From the 10th Cavalry in Arizona, and of purely military background, came its bandmaster Alfred Jack Thomas (another of the original “quota of four” black bandmasters in the US army), his second-in-command Dorcy Rhodes, and Burnit McReynolds. E. E. Thompson,

\(^4\) Including Henderson Smith (b.1858), N. Clark Smith (b.1866), Will Marion Cook (b.1869), William H. Tyers (b.1870), Fred W. Simpson (b.1871), Walter H. Loving (b.1872), John Rosamond Johnson (b.1873), and W. C. Handy (b.1873).

\(^5\) J. Tim Brymn (b.1879), F. Eugene Mikell (b.1880), James Reese Europe (b.1880), E. E. Thompson (b.1883) and A. Jack Thomas (b.1884). Of this generation, the principal figure not to direct a military band was Ford T. Dabney (1883-1958).

\(^6\) Dorcy Rhodes (b.1887), Burnit McReynolds (b.1887), Norman Scott (b.1888), Frank L. Drye (b.1889), and Arthur T. Stewart (b.1891).

\(^7\) Wesley I. Howard (b. 1889), Edward Bailey (b.1890), Ralph S. Redmond (b. 1890), Amos M. White (b. 1890), George L. Polk (b. 1890), Ralph W. E. Brown (b. 1893), Lawrence Denton (b. 1893), Louia Vaughn Jones (b. 1895).
now a Clef Club and Tempo Club insider, was a ten-year veteran of British military bands from his Jamaican days, and had also served a US National Guard stint with the 15th N.Y. Men of less military experience included Frank L. Drye, who had served just one three-year term of enlistment with the 9th Cavalry, and George E. Dulf (a national guardsman who had experienced some active duty). James Reese Europe (a rank novice) mustered into the regular army after a short stint in the National Guard.

Theater and society orchestras, and bands of the itinerant vaudeville, minstrel shows, medicine shows, and circus side-shows, were the largest single source of new black bandmasters, even though few men from this sphere had had any prior military experience. What they did have, though, was a familiarity not only with popular music but with the performance of classical music in arrangements for band. 8 From New York’s “Black Manhattan” came not only Europe and Thompson, but also Brymn, Vodery, Redmond, Kincaid and De Broite; from Chicago came Dulf, Bailey, and Stewart; from Minneapolis, Cason; from Kansas City, Denton, and from troupes on the road came George L. Polk and Amos M. White. Men just one step removed from the music business included Frank L. Drye, who once had been on the road as cornet soloist for W. C. Handy, and F. Eugene Mikell, who had run minstrel show and theatre orchestras for many years in Jacksonville, Florida and Chicago.

Black schools directly yielded Drye from Tuskegee; Mikell, a man who also had extensive prior educational experience in South Carolina and Florida, from the Bordentown, New Jersey Industrial School (“the Tuskegee of the North”); the veteran Elbert B. Williams from the new Columbia Conservatory of Music in Washington, D.C.; Ralph W. E. Brown from the Hungerford School in Eatonville, Fla.; Horace B. Wallace from Lane College in Jackson, Tenn.; and Norman Scott, a self-employed music teacher from Wilmington, Del. To this number can be added Native American conductor James Riley Wheelock from the Carlisle Indian Industrial School. Neophytes Louia Vaughn Jones and 8 The larger minstrel show orchestras and bands often played classical music. In one week in 1911, for example, the band of Richard’s & Pringle’s Famous Georgia Minstrels rendered selections from William Tell, Bohemian Girl, Faust, Tannhauser, Pique Dame, Rigoletto, Il Trovatore, and Lucia di Lammermoor, and light classical band fare such as the fantasies on “Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep” and “Old Folks at Home.” See the Indianapolis Freeman, February 18, 1911, p. 6.

Wesley I. Howard were very young, recent graduates of the New England Conservatory, where both were violin majors.

*

RECRUITMENT

A review of bands and bandmasters undertaken geographically provides the most insight into the army’s strategy of musical recruitment. In this respect, it is appropriate to start with Chicago, so many of whose local black musicians could play “genuine jazz music, such as is only found in Chicago.”

It was Chicago rather than New York City, moreover, that had the greater heritage of military music. This requires some explaining. At the declaration of war in April 1917 there were two standing African-American regiment-level bands in addition to the four regular black Army regimental bands. These additional regimental bands, led by black bandmasters, belonged to the only two existing black National Guard regiments, the 8th Illinois of Chicago and the 15th New York. The Eighth, considerably the senior of the two, had been around for quite a while, its roots dating back to the 1870s. It was formally designated as the Eighth Illinois Volunteer Infantry Regiment in 1898 when it was called into active duty with the regiment for the Spanish-American War, and it was recalled to active duty in the Mexican border war of 1916. Its nationally recognized band was a superlative outfit, skilled in popular as well as classical styles, and an aspirational model for all the subsequent new bands.

The band of the Old Eighth was led by George Edmund Dulf, a prominent figure for decades in black minstrel shows who had been associated with it since 1898, conducting it ca. 1898-1901 and again ca. 1914-1917. Under his baton, it was involved with jazz from an early date. In 1916, the regiment swung into camp in Texas to “a tune that was freighted with homesickness for Chicago troops . . . . It was just the “Jaz band” of the Eighth Illinois

---

9 Chicago Tribune, March 10, 1919, p. 7.
10 There were also individual companies of African American soldiers within primarily white regiments in some state national guards, and some of these companies had bands. The 372nd, for example, was manned by men from several such black companies. It is likely that its regimental band drew on the personnel of a number of established company-level black guard bands.
11 On George Dulf, see now “Chronology and Itinerary of the Career of George E. Dulf: Materials for a Biography,” on-line at http://digitalcommons.unl.edu/musicfacpub/57/infantry making light the steps to camp for the Negro doughboys.” The regiment was brought into war service in the fall of 1917 and redesignated as the 370th in December of that year. It trained far from home, first at Camp Logan near Houston, in which city the band led the Great Parade of the Eighth Regiment on November 7, 1917, and then at Camp Stuart, near Newport News, where the band led the Washington Birthday parade of several thousand military personnel through Norfolk, Virginia in February, 1918. The 370th went to France in April 1918, and, after ten months away, was welcomed home to Chicago in a great celebration on February 17, 1919.

The second great African-American regiment formed in the Chicago area was the 365th Infantry, a unit of draftees which was organized in October 1917 at Camp Grant, just south of Rockford, Ill. To be regimental bandmaster of the 365th, a young outsider, Frank L. Drye, a former military bandsman and then the cornet soloist for W. C. Handy, came north from his current position as bandmaster at the Tuskegee Institute, via the Des Moines training camp for black officers, where he earned his officer's stripe. At Camp Grant, Lieutenant Drye organized some very successful large shows for which he was musical director, conductor, and cornet soloist. Drye, a commissioned line officer, later fought at the front in Europe and was individually decorated for valor. The unit's officially appointed Band Leader, who handled most of its day-to-day conducting duties, was a prominent local Chicago musician and colleague of Dulf, sergeant (later Lieutenant) Arthur T. Stewart. While still in Rockford, a sixteen-man subset of their ensemble "established a reputation for 'jazz stuff'." The 365th went to France in June 1918 and enjoyed its own great welcome home celebration in Chicago on March 10, 1919. Band sergeant Albert Jones, an 12 Chicago Broad Axe, July 8, 1916, p. 4 ("Eighth Troops Swing In Camp to "Jaz" Music"). This is an early appearance of the word "jaz," and, characteristically, it is associated with Chicago musicians. In fact, the earliest known application of the term to music, from just a year earlier, is from the Chicago Tribune, July 11, 1915, p. E8 ("Blues is Jazz and Jazz is Blues"). New Orleans theatrical musicians in later 1916 were reported as irate that Chicago musicians were being credited with discovering the new form of music known as the "jaz band." See New Orleans States, November 12, 1916, p. 32 New Orleans States, November 14, 1916, p. 4, New Orleans States, November 22, 1916, p. 10, and New Orleans Times-Picayune, November 22, 1916, p. 6.

14 Rockford Republic, February 1, 1918, p. 5.
active clarinetist in Chicago before the war and a frequent soloist with the band at Camp Grant, conducted the band in appearances in Chicago after its return.\textsuperscript{15}

In July 1918, a third major Chicago area regiment of black draftees, the 803rd Pioneer Infantry regiment, was organized at Camp Grant. Its band played under Edward W. Bailey, who had been the leader of the orchestra at one of the nation’s most important African-American theatrical venues, the States Theater on Chicago’s South Side. The band quickly took Camp Grant by storm before shipping out, and a concert by the group upon its arrival back home after the war was eagerly anticipated.\textsuperscript{16} Many of the men of the 803rd were Rockford area locals, especially employees of the Rockford Malleable Iron Works, and thus it was appropriate that Bailey’s assistant band leader was Alfred J. Taylor, a Tuskegee graduate and talented musician who had toured with the Tuskegee Singers and discovered the Rockford area; settling there, he took a day job at the iron works. When Taylor returned to Rockford after the war, he formed an American Legion band drawing not only on men from the 803rd but also including local veterans who had played with the band of the 365th.\textsuperscript{17}

From the New York area, the black entertainment industry yielded up some of its finest talent to the army, eventually staffing five regimental bands, four of which were widely celebrated. As in Chicago, the story must begin with the National Guard.

The second of the nation’s two black National Guard regiments, the 15th N.Y., had only recently been established, on July 1, 1916. The history of the band of the 15th N.Y. is an elaborate story, and one that has been distorted somewhat by the celebrity of James Reese Europe. Its first Chief Musician was E. E. (Egbert E.) Thompson, hands down the most obvious candidate for the job working in New York City at the time. Thompson, “the black

\begin{footnotes}
\footnotetext{15}{Chicago Defender, October 30, 1915, p. 6; Chicago Defender, November 27, 1915, p. 6; Rockford Daily Register Gazette, May 7, 1918, p. 2; Chicago Broad Ax, April 19, 1919, p. 4; Dallas Express, May 10, 1919, p. 1.}
\footnotetext{16}{Rockford Morning Star, September 16, 1918, p. 14; Rockford Morning Star, June 3, 1919, p. 32.}
\footnotetext{17}{Rockford Morning Star, December 23, 1919, p. 4. And as another example of how the Chicago area veteran bandsmen kept in contact, "a band composed of the best talent of the 365th Infantry Band, the 8th Regiment Band, and the 803rd Pioneer Infantry Band" headed the parade that kicked off the first American Legion recruitment drive among African American veterans in the Chicago area at the 8th Regiment Armory on October 12, 1919 (Chicago Broad Axe, October 11, 1919, p. 2).}
\end{footnotes}
Sousa,” was a veteran of the British military band world who, because he could never rise to bandmaster in the British Army, had left the Caribbean and military life in 1907 for what became a highly successful career in the New York entertainment industry.\textsuperscript{18} As he was becoming established in New York City, he also polished his musical skills as a student for three years, from 1908 to 1911, at the Institute of Musical Art, earning the deep respect of its director, Frank Damrosch.\textsuperscript{19} Thompson had been leading a professional concert and dance ensemble of forty men, “Thompson’s Military Band,” in New York for several years when the call came to build a band for the guard regiment. He led the band of the 15th N.Y. in its first full season, from late summer 1916 to mid April 1917.

Thompson’s National Guard band was a unit made up of a mixture of unpaid, enlisted guardsmen, some of whom owned no instruments and had no prior musical experience, and also ringers who were paid New York professional musicians drawn from his own commercial outfit. He worked diligently all fall and winter to alter this mix and staff the band entirely with musically-experienced volunteer guardsmen, but he was never able to pull this off. Nonetheless his accomplishments with the band were praised, and its core was strong. The 15th N.Y. marched in a great New York City parade to get its regimental colors on October 1, 1916 to the tune of the band under Thompson.\textsuperscript{20} Shortly thereafter, the band made its first concert appearance, playing for a benefit at the Manhattan Casino on October 20.\textsuperscript{21} Meanwhile, the professional Thompson’s Military Band played at Tempo Club concerts under the sponsorship of Jim Europe in 1916-17 and \textsuperscript{19} Frank Damrosch’s strong letter of recommendation for E. E. Thompson is printed in the New York \textit{Age}, April 5, 1919, pp. 6-7.

\textsuperscript{20}New York \textit{Age}, October 5, 1916, p. 1, on the parade, mentions that the regimental band had 65 members. New York \textit{Age}, October 5, 1916, p. 4, in an editorial discussing last Sunday’s parade and getting the unit’s colors, “Col. Hayward and his officers deserve much credit for what they have accomplished in so short a time. And special mention must be made of Chief Musician Thompson and his band.” A short article in the New York \textit{Age}, October 5, 1916, p. 6, offers compliments to the 15th regiment band under Chief Musician Thompson.
\textsuperscript{21} New York \textit{Age}, October 26, 1916, p. 6, in a review of the band concert on October 20, mentions that Thompson was working with “untrained material,” and that many of its instrumentalists had been just assigned their instruments and were learning them. A columnist in the Indianapolis \textit{Freeman} (November 4, 1916, p. 4) said that this concert proved that Thompson “is the peer of all the colored bandmasters and can be compared without much exaggeration with the best of the white.”
continued to play on their own and for Jim Europe after Thompson stepped down from the 15th N.Y in April 1917.22

Colonel William Hayward, commander of the 15th N.Y., was jealous of the band of the more senior black National Guard regiment, the 8th Illinois. In December 1916, on account of his concern for the quality, irregular staffing, and continual out-of-pocket expense of the band under Thompson, Hayward began to put pressure on one of his newly-commissioned officers, Jim Europe, to help with the situation.23 Europe, one of the best known black musicians in New York City, had enthusiastically enrolled in the National Guard in September 1916 as a private, though not as a bandsman, and as just mentioned, he had been employing Thompson’s band in his civilian business. He was rapidly promoted to sergeant that fall and then given an officer’s commission in December as a first lieutenant. In early 1917, with the help of fellow Clef Clubber Noble Sissle, who had also joined the 15th N.Y. in the fall of 1916, Jim Europe mounted a vigorous funding and recruitment campaign for the band. Their goals were to get more professional musicians to enlist as guardsmen, and to establish an endowment to pay them an acceptable wage, since guardsmen earned no money for their service.

Nine months after the regiment was established, and just after the US declaration of war in April 1917, the 15th N.Y. passed inspection and was federalized. Thompson took this moment to step aside from the regiment’s band.24 Hayward and his fellow senior white

---

24 New York Age, April 19, 1917, p. 1. Col. Hayward’s statement about the band situation included the following: “It may not be generally known that although Mr. Thompson who has resigned as bandmaster, worked hard, he was unable to get the members of his band to enlist. The band that the public has seen and heard was composed only in part of enlisted men. The others being civilians whose services were paid for from time to time, and on every occasion, including recruiting duty, excepting three. Of course, the non-enlisted men were of no use to us when the regiment went into service. I do not think that the failure to secure enlisted men for the band was through lack of officers had shaken down their rich friends for contributions. Europe, taking over with a $10,000 band fund now at his disposal, immediately sailed for Puerto Rico to recruit some musicians, especially reed players. Curiously, despite all he was doing and would do for the band, Europe could not be its official Band Leader. An appointment for First Lieutenant Europe as Band Leader would have required an unacceptable demotion to non-commissioned officer status. Instead, F. Eugene Mikell enlisted and received the appointment as sergeant Band Leader. Europe was nonetheless ex officio the renovated band’s primary conductor and musical director. For the next two years, it was referred to as Europe’s band, and at its head he became a major international celebrity. With the band fund already seriously depleted, their first public appearance under Jim Europe was at a benefit at the Manhattan Casino on June 22, 1917; it left for the front six months later. Its regiment served the longest overseas of any of the black regiments; the first to leave, it sailed for France on December 12, 1917 and returned to the US on February 12, 1919. It was renamed the 369th in France. When the regiment returned its colors back in New York on February 17, 1919 in a giant parade through Manhattan, it was headed up by the band, which was directed by Europe and led by drum major Gillard Thompson.

The second great African American combat infantry regiment from New York City, the 367th, was formed from draftees at Camp Upton, on Long Island, in early November 1917. Thus the 369th and 367th of New York City were a guardsmen/draftees pair just like 370th and 365th of Chicago. The band of the 367th was put into the hands of none other diligent and earnest efforts on Mr. Thompson’s part. He had a difficult task. I felt, however, that progress would be made by making a new start from the beginning.”

25 The personal subsidy of $10,000 given by New York banker Daniel G. Reid is reported in almost every story about Jim Europe’s band, but the regiment’s officers and other prominent New Yorkers among Hayward’s friends gave lesser amounts to the band fund, which was for instruments as well as salaries; indeed, the Reid check for $10,000 may well have been intended just for the necessary equipment (Trenton Evening Times, September 7, 1917, p. 3; Chicago Defender, March 23, 1918, p. 5; New York Herald, April 17, 1918; Flint Journal, April 22, 1919, p. 3; Little, From Harlem to the Rhine, p. 122).

26 Thus, Jim Europe and Eugene Mikell stood in the same relationship in the 369th as Lieut. Frank L. Drye, a line officer, and Lieut. Arthur T. Stewart, Band Leader, had in the 365th. On Mikell, see “Chronology and Itinerary of the Career of Eugene Mikell: Materials for a Biography,” on-line at http://digitalcommons.unl.edu/musicfacpub/60/

27 Sissle, "Memoirs," p. 63; see also Badger, A Life in Ragtime, p. 150.

28 Not Bill “Bojangles” Robinson. than E. E. Thompson, who had been the first bandmaster of the 15th N.Y. After less than two months of rehearsal, he had his latest regimental band ready to play at a Grand Military Ball on New Year's Eve at the 71st Regiment Armory at 34th and Park in Manhattan. It was reported at the time that Thompson wanted to make his group one of the best in the army, and that they “made a most favorable impression.”

The 367th and its band participated with all the other Camp Upton regiments in the Washington’s Birthday Parade in NYC on Friday, February 22, 1918, winning great applause. Variety commented that "many thought it a better musical organization than the band Jimmy Europe formed and which is now in France." The regiment got its colors after a major parade through Manhattan on March 23, 1918, and upon their arrival in Harlem, the band had enough pep left to entertain the crowd with ragtime. At the end of March the band appeared in concert at the Manhattan Opera House with guests including Abbie Mitchell and Will Marion Cook.

Enduring seven months of stateside preparation, it continued to participate in events like Liberty Loan parades. The 367th finally went overseas in June 1918. It continued to be the subject of attention in New York papers while abroad, and a Monster Benefit was held for the regiment in Manhattan in October, with a huge, racially integrated, all-star roster. Back by late February 1919, the 367th returned its colors in its home city after another spectacular parade through town, led by the band, on March 14, 1919.

At the same time as the 367th was being formed on Long Island, but a short train ride out of Manhattan in the opposite direction, the 349th and 350th Field Artillery

29 New York Age, December 29, 1917, p. 6; New York Age, January 5, 1918, p. 6.
30 Variety, late February 1918, p. 8 on the Vaudeville page.
31 For a general account of the parade, see the New York Times, Feb 22, 1918, p. 11, and New York Times, February 23, 1918, pp. 1, 3. The Crisis 15/6 (April, 1918), p. 294, reports that "An attempt was made to leave the colored soldiers out of the Washington Birthday Parade down Fifth Avenue. The Governor interfered and the battalion of the 367th colored regiment, which paraded, received the most attention and applause among the 10,000 marchers."
32 New York Age, March 30, 1918, p. 6 ("367th in Dance and Song").
33 Nassau Post, April 19, 1918, p. 5.
34 The benefit was held Sunday, October 27, 1918. See advertisements in the New York Age, October 19, 1918, p. 6 and New York Age, October 26, 1918, p. 6; the same paper printed a review on November 2, 1919, p. 6. Participants included white stars Belle Baker, Irving Berlin, David Bispham, Eddie Cantor, Eddie Leonard, and Marilyn Miller, as well as black stars including Bert Williams, Wilbur Sweatman, Abbie Mitchell, Ford Dabney’s Syncopated Orchestra, and Will Marion Cook's Clef Club Orchestra and Singers.
regiments, composed of draftees primarily from New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania, were being assembled at Camp Dix near Trenton, NJ. The exploits of these units were followed with care by the press of three cities: New York City, Trenton, and Philadelphia. The more prominent band to emerge from this pair was that of the 350th under a Manhattan Clef Club stalwart and long-time colleague of Jim Europe, J. Tim Brymn.\textsuperscript{35} His regimental colonel wanted their band to be the best in the service, and its white officers worked hard to raise a band fund that would support an ensemble of 100 men. The great contralto Ernestine Schumann-Heink, the “Mother of the Army,” sang at a concert with the band in New Jersey on May 15, 1918, and became its chief sponsor.\textsuperscript{36} In terms of drumming up private money to fund a large band, Brymn’s 350th regiment was evidently even more successful than Europe’s 369th. He took an ensemble of 70 overseas and continued to add men to it. Brymn wrote columnist Lester A. Walton of the New York \textit{Age} from France in October 1918 and said, “My band is now increased to one hundred musicians, as we are considered A-1 in the army.”\textsuperscript{37} Indeed, it was widely reported to be the single largest musical unit serving in World War I. One of the regiment’s combat soldiers, who served as Drum Major when he was not at the front, was William H. (Willie the Lion) Smith, the great Harlem stride pianist.

When President Wilson opened a nationwide Red Cross Campaign in May 1918, the kickoff was a huge parade in Manhattan on Saturday, May 18, led by Brymn’s 350th regiment band (with Thompson’s 367th considerably further back in the line of march). Famously, the president could not resist moving to its music and got out of his limousine to walk the route.\textsuperscript{38} Brymn’s band stayed in town to participate in Sunday morning services on May 19, and it gave a concert on the Central Park Mall for the Red Cross that afternoon, playing for an audience of 50,000.\textsuperscript{39} Shortly thereafter, in June 1918, it went overseas, returning in early March 1919.

\textsuperscript{35} Emmett J. Scott says Brymn also helped prepare the band of the 349th for an extended period, which makes sense since it was at Camp Dix at the same time. See Scott’s \textit{Official History of the American Negro in the World War} (Chicago: Homewood Press, 1919; repr. NY: Arno Press, 1969), p. 310. It is further possible that the bands of the 3439th and 350th were occasionally merged overseas, which could go a long way to explain Brymn’s claim that his band eventually expanded to 100 musicians. On Tim Brymn, see now “Chronology and Itinerary of the Career of J. Tim Brymn: Materials for a Biography,” on-line at \url{http://digitalcommons.unl.edu/musicfacpub/64/}

\textsuperscript{36} New York \textit{Age}, May 17, 1918, p. 6; see also Scott, \textit{Official History}, p. 311.

\textsuperscript{37} By contrast, Jim Europe’s band on the continent, though second to none in the American Army, was an ensemble of just 44 or 45; Badger says 44 went overseas. See Reid Badger, “Performance Practice Techniques in the James Reese Europe Band,” In Howard T. Weiner, ed., \textit{Early Twentieth-Century Brass Idioms}, Rutgers Institute of Jazz Studies, Studies in Jazz, no. 58 (Scarecrow Press, 2009), Chapter 7, pp. 64-72.

A little later in the year, at the end of July 1918, a fifth African American regiment that included men from the New York area, the 807th Pioneer Infantry Regiment, was formed at Camp Dix with draftees from New York and New Jersey, along with men from Delaware, West Virginia, and North Carolina. Its band became the fourth and final great New York area black army band, alongside those of Europe's 369th, Thompson's 367th, and Brymn’s 350th. (The band of the 349th never made the same kind of splash.) The Band Leader of the 807th was the great theatrical composer-arranger Will Vodery,\textsuperscript{40} with experienced trombonist Ralph S. Redmond as Assistant Band Leader, and tenor soloist and jazz instrumentalist Opal D. Cooper as drum major. Within just three months this ensemble reached a noteworthy level of excellence. In fact, a front page 1929 obituary in the New York \textit{Age} for one of its performers says “their band won fame, second only to that of Lieut. Jim Europe's Fifteenth Hellfighters.”\textsuperscript{41} And “at least one commanding officer pronounced them ‘the best band in the A. E. F.’.”\textsuperscript{42} The Band Secretary, Corporal Albert A. Smith, was not shy about declaring that "We established ourselves as one of the premiere bands in the A. E. F.”\textsuperscript{43}

Such renown indicates that Vodery had found amongst the regiment’s draftees (or brought with him into the band as volunteer enlistees) many East Coast professionals. By one later description it was a band of 52 players, while one extant photograph shows a conductor and 47 instrumentalists.\textsuperscript{44} For theatrical shows they broke out a smaller group.

\begin{flushright}
38 New York \textit{Age}, May 25, 1918, p. 1 ("He Heard Music and Just Had to Walk"); see also the New York \textit{Age}, May 17, 1919, p. 6: “I simply must march to that music; it is irresistible.”
40 On Will Vodery, see “Chronology and Itinerary of the Career of Will Vodery: Materials for a Biography,” on-line at \texttt{http://digitalcommons.unl.edu/musicfacpub/62/}.
44 A photo of the band taken when they were at Souilly was first published in the New York \textit{Age}, January 4, 1919, p. 6.
\end{flushright}
There is a roster of Vodery’s minstrel show and pit orchestra totaling 30 names, comprising about 10 actor-singers and 20 instrumentalists. More than half of these individuals can be traced as active professional actors and musicians in civilian life. One particularly prominent subset of men who played together in the 807th---Opal Cooper, Sammy Richardson, Louia V. Jones, and Earl Granstaff---returned to France after the war and played together on-and-off for most of the 1920s.

Moving down the East Coast, the Baltimore-Washington area also yielded a pair of African American combat regiments, the 368th Infantry and the 351st Artillery, which both were formed from draftees and established in October 1917. These units were organized at Camp Meade, which lies roughly half way between the two cities. They drew their recruits from Pennsylvania, Maryland, and the South. Two regular army bandsmen whose careers had long been joined came east together from the 10th Cavalry in Arizona---Band Leader Alfred Jack Thomas and Assistant Band Leader Dorcy Rhodes---to conduct the bands of these new units. Thomas and Rhodes had each taken time off from their duties with the 10th Cavalry to go the Governor’s Island Army Bandmasters School, in 1912-14 and 1914-1916, respectively. Maintaining a striking parallelism, they were often mentioned together in the Washington papers, and they would both muster out after the war and return to the Capitol area to work in academia, Thomas to Baltimore to establish the Aeolian Conservatory and Rhodes to Washington, DC to run the Howard University ROTC Band.

Thomas’s band was by far the more important of the pair, if assessed by documented activities and contemporary newspaper references. He made a big effort to staff it with experienced musicians. In an advertisement for players placed in the Washington Bee, Thomas promised “No Trench digging, guard duty or other laborious duties to perform. Special privileges accorded to bandmen.” Jim Europe, in fact, thought the 368th of A. J. Thomas was the best band in the A. E. F. By this he probably meant that it was the best of the bands at performing serious music, and we know that "the men say they prefer to play classical pieces." In early 1918 the band numbered 87 pieces, which included a field music unit of 39 bugles, fifes, and drums, and a concert unit of 48. The 48 players were evenly divided at this time between woodwinds and brass, and Thomas hoped to increase the number of woodwinds to achieve a ratio of one-third brass instruments to two-thirds woodwinds, the reverse of the usual ratio in army bands.

---

45 New York Age, January 4, 1919, p. 6 ("Making Music for the Army").
46 For example, Washington Bee, February 9, 1918, p. 5, when they were guests together at a Washington dinner, and Washington Bee, April 5, 1919, p. 3, reporting on both after their return to the states.

The band of the 368th could split off a terrific freestanding jazz band led by its colorful drum major, Edgar A. Landin. An imposing 6’ 4” former Philadelphia policeman, Landin was hailed as “The Ragtime Baton-Twirler,” “The Great Cake-Walking Bandleader and His Jazz Band,” and “The Sultan of Syncopation and His Gallavantin’ Jazz Band.” While in the states, the band of the 368th was active, for example, providing a concert at Camp Meade on Easter Sunday 1918 to which the public was invited and that was announced on page one of the Washington Bee. It also played in Baltimore and Washington. The band was especially busy in the spring of 1918 in the Liberty Loan Drive. To open this effort, President Woodrow Wilson attended a Baltimore troop review and parade on Saturday, April 6, 1918 where Drum Major Landin’s antics were a hit with the dour president. Landin immediately became a significant national celebrity, “The Dusky Drum Major That Made the President Laugh.”

Later that summer, in July 1918, a third important Baltimore-Washington area band was formed at Camp Meade as part of the 808th Pioneer Infantry regiment, a unit which drew almost half its men from Maryland. Its Band Leader was a Native American (Oneida), James Riley Wheelock, a well-known musical figure in the Baltimore-Washington area. Wheelock, "the red rival of Sousa," was one of the most senior of the new bandmasters at age 44. He had made a prominent public bid in the spring of 1917 to become the bandmaster of a regiment in one of Theodore Roosevelt’s proposed volunteer divisions, and then took a post at his alma mater, the Carlisle Indian Industrial School, when 48 New York Age, February 22, 1919, p. 6; see also Badger, p. 308.

51 Baltimore Sun, April 12, 1918, p. 16; Philadelphia Evening Public Ledger, April 19, 1918, p. 8; Baltimore Sun, May 12, 1918, p. 14. Edgar A. Landin (3 September 1891 - March 1966).
President Wilson quashed Roosevelt's plans.53 With the closing of the Carlisle School a year later by the government, Wheelock was an obvious choice to lead the band of a locally-staffed regiment, and he was able to attract talented musicians. In the racial politics of the Army, Wheelock was effectively white, which we can infer from the fact that a younger Native American (Chippewa) and Carlisle graduate, Gus Welch, was a commissioned officer (second lieutenant, rising quickly to captain) in the 808th, whose officer corps always was described as all-white.

America's Deep South was represented among the combat regiments by the 371st Infantry, based in South Carolina. Its band was led by Captain Elbert Williams, a retired Army veteran who had been the U.S. Army's first officially appointed and confirmed black regimental Chief Musician (1908); he had been teaching music in Washington, D. C. Before going overseas, the 371st Infantry Band played for events such as a "race conference" encouraging African Americans to purchase war bonds and war saving stamps (thrift stamps).54

The Great Plains and upper Midwest are the final African American population center from which the army drew heavily. One combat infantry regiment not yet accounted for, the 366th, was mustered into service at Camp Dodge, just to the northwest of Des Moines, Iowa, in November 1917. Its band made its first appearance on February 5, 1918, under Sergeant Grinnell.55

And Kansas City deserves mention for the two Pioneer Infantry regiments, the 805th and 806th, that were organized at nearby Camp Funston in Manhattan, Kansas, in the summer of 1918. They were staffed mostly with recruits from the Kansas-Missouri and broader Great Plains region, but as was true of many of the other Pioneer Infantry units, they also drew on a wider, even national population for their manpower. The men of the band of the 805th, for example, were not just from Kansas, Missouri, and Oklahoma, but 53 Gettysburg Times, March 24, 1917, p. 3; Philadelphia Evening Public Ledger, March 27, 1917, p. 5. The New York Age, June 7, 1917, p. 1 reports that Roosevelt had wanted to raise two black regiments. Could Wheelock have known this, and might there be a relationship to his appointment with the 808th?

54 Columbia (SC) Record, March 13, 1918, p. 8.
55 Des Moines Bystander, March 8, 1918, p. 4; Des Moines Bystander, March 15, 1918, p. 3; Des Moines Bystander, May 3, 1918, p. 4.
also from Texas, Ohio, Louisiana, Delaware, New Jersey, and New York City. They were led by George L. Polk of Smyrna, Delaware, who at the time he filled out his draft registration card had been playing with J. C. O’Brien’s Georgia Minstrels. Lawrence Denton from Kansas City, who led the band of the 806th for a time, remembered that it had men "from all over, Louisiana, Mississippi, Los Angeles." Nonetheless, for both units, their principal identity lay with Kansas City, and, for example, upon their return, the soldiers and bandsmen of the 805th led the July 4, 1919 parade in that city.

SERVICE IN FRANCE

Overseas, most of the bands stayed close to their regiments, playing for the troops in the trenches under fire and for the men at rest immediately to the rear. Away from the combat zone, they performed at military ceremonies, at public open-air concerts for civilians, at private soirees for generals and politicians and royalty, in music halls and hospitals, and at Rest Areas. The larger bands were really entertainment troupes. They could break up into smaller groups including jazz bands and vaudeville theatre orchestras, and bandsmen could put down their horns to pick up banjos and violins, or to sing in quartets, double quartets, and choruses. Not just purveyors of concert music, the bands carried actors and singers on their roster and could mount and accompany staged minstrel and variety shows that included skits, solo and quartet singing, and virtuoso dancing.

The bands varied considerably in size, quality, and capabilities. Pinning down the number of instrumentalists in the larger groups is hard to do without photos or rosters, and these can be surprisingly hard to come by; further, cited numbers need to be interpreted with caution, since they may include only the instrumentalists or also include 56 Bliss, History of the 805th, pp. 65-67, 208, gives a full roster for the band, including photos and hometowns; George L. Polk was just a private when he was pulled out of the ranks to lead the band.

58 Kansas City Advocate, June 6, 1919, p. 4.
59 For diary accounts of two (white) bandsmen (both of whom ended up in Pershing’s post-armistice All-Star AEF GHQ band), which are insightful about forming bands, fashioning soldiers into musicians, and the bandsman’s daily life, see Royce Boyer, “The World War I Army Bandsman: A Diary Account by Philip James,” American Music 14/2 (1996): 185-204, and see the diary of bandsman Robert R. Gustafson, online at www.worldwar1.com/dbc/rgustafson.htm (accessed 6/7/2011).
the actors and singers. Numbers also change depending on whether what is being described is the band before embarking for Europe, the band in the war zone, or the band on tour after its return to the US. Passenger rosters of the troop transports may report all the musicians, or else leave some hidden in combat units if they had never been officially transferred into the Headquarters Company. The flu epidemic of 1918-1919 insured that photographs of the bands in France may not always have showed them at full strength.

The US Army’s military band reforms of mid-1918 (see below) permitted bands at full strength to increase from 28 to 48 men, and the latter number might also have determined how many individuals were officially identified as band members in the troop ship passenger lists upon the return to America (while additional bandsmen could simply have been listed among the privates in the Headquarters Company). A photo of the band of the 372nd shows scarcely two dozen men. Dulf in the 370th sailed with 25, returned with 48, and toured after the war with 56. Polk in the 805th had 38. Passenger rosters give Europe and Mikell a group of 50 in France, while the Hell-Fighters Band toured with 65 back in the US; Europe’s overseas band is sometimes described as a group of 44 or 45, but two officers and 56 enlisted men were detailed to travel to Aix-les-Bains (see below). The additional enlisted men were likely the actors and singers in the troupe. Thomas had 48. Vodery sailed with 55, a photo taken in the field shows 48 men, and he returned with 48. Brymn sailed for war with 37 musicians and returned with 48, although he claimed that his band reached 100 men in France, and back in the US, he toured immediately after the war with 70.

Those ensembles built from draftees might be small and weak---barely able to scratch out a march or accompany military drills---while better bands might work from a playbook of mainly standard light classical and middlebrow popular fare.\(^\text{61}\) Intensive recruiting by an ambitious colonel with a band fund and an able conductor might coax a \(^\text{60}\) A letter from Tim Brymn to Lester Walton of the New York \textit{Age} was published in October 1919, in which Brymn writes that "My band is increased to one hundred musicians, as we are considered A-1 in the Army" (New York \textit{Age}, October 26, 1918, n.p. [p. 6]).

---

\(^\text{61}\) Not all draftee bandsmen were already musicians, or if they had come into the army with some training, for example as a pianist or singer, then they were not always proficient on a band instrument. Bands needed instruments, and funds for this purpose could be hard to locate. Bands were mostly blends of professionals and capable amateurs with rank beginners. Conductors might be pulled from the ranks of privates.
significant number of voluntary enlistments and result in a flexible, professional-quality ensemble, an entertainment troupe whose numbers included singers, actors, and dancers in addition to bandsmen. An ability to play the newest hot ragtime idiom called jazz often garnered the most attention. Not all band leaders had an affinity for jazz, though, and in at least two demonstrable instances (in the 368th and the 809th), jazz band duties were delegated to the Assistant Band Leader or the drum major.

Although James Reese Europe’s band unquestionably had the highest visibility and renown of any U.S. Army band in France, each of the other black regimental bands serving in England or on the continent deserves further attention than it has received to date. Except when the bands were away from the front, however, particularly at the leave areas at Aix-les-Bains and nearby Chambery, or in Paris, much of their wartime activity is extremely hard to trace. In the combat zone, when they were playing at all rather than ducking artillery shells and helping the wounded, they were not going to get much if any press due to a news blackout on account of the need for secrecy about their regiment’s whereabouts “Somewhere in France.” Such accounts as do turn up in the US press could be printed months after the fact due to censorship and transportation delays for mail. An article in the New York Herald (Paris ed.), quoted in a New Jersey paper after the Armistice, reveals how band activities could be sensitive news: “The appearance of the band of the 350th Field Artillery Regiment in Nancy for a concert was the first notice here that the only brigade of negro artillery every organized had been defending Nancy by holding the Marbache sector, south of Metz.”

By the time of the Armistice on November 11, 1918 the regiments had been abroad for anywhere from one to eleven months, and in some cases their bands had never left the side of the troops. After the Armistice, the majority of bandsmen faced an additional three months or more of camp life in mud and rain alongside all the other doughboys, with boredom, pneumonia, and the flu epidemic as unpleasant companions, before transport home. At this moment, to their relief, bands other than Jim Europe’s began to be summoned away from their regiments for more ceremonial duties, in special assignments that were a welcome diversion.

---

CONCERTIZING IN FRANCE

The following quick review of band activities first will summarize the activities of the two most celebrated bands, those of Jim Europe and Will Vodery. Next to be sketched will be what we know about the more prominent remaining bands, moving from division to division rather than following the stateside geographical path that was taken above in the account of their initial formation. Mentioned here are the principle wartime anecdotes about the bands of the black combat regiments that can be gleaned from later accounts, especially US newspapers articles and concert advertisements. Wartime censorship in Europe and America still obscures our view of the activities of the bands before the Armistice, even at the distance of one hundred years. Surely much more remains to be discovered in the newspaper files and archives of the French villages, towns, and cities where black regiments and their Headquarters Company bands were billeted or concertized.

THE 369TH AND THE 807TH

The 15th N.Y. spent the longest time abroad of any black regiment---a total of thirteen months---for ten of which its band was under Mikell’s baton. He had substantially more podium time with the band than did Jim Europe. However, it was the total of three months of concertizing away from the front before the Armistice by Europe and the “Hell Fighters’ Band” that drew extensive attention at the time and has been remarked on at length by so many since. These three months began with a month in the rest area at Aix-les-Bains from mid February to mid March 1918, including elaborate concert tours by train to and from that town.63 Jim Europe, as a combat officer, had to have special permission to step out of his company to conduct the band at Aix-les-Bains.

63 Aix-les-Bains is less than 400 miles south of Paris and the front, but the band was said to have travelled several thousand miles to get there and back. The rest area had just opened, and Europe’s band entertained the first soldiers to be pulled off the front. See The Crisis 15/6 (April 1918), p.
The 15th N.Y. was formally re-designated the 369th on March 12, 1918, and was sent to the front under French command. Europe went with the fighters. He was away from the headquarters band for almost six months, from mid March to August 1918, to lead his machine gun company in combat, during which experience he got gassed and was hospitalized in July. He rejoined the band in time for two months of concerts in Paris from mid August to mid October 1918. There the band’s initial appearance was at the final meeting of the Allied Peace Conference in Paris, held in the Théâtre des Champs-Elysées on August 18. This signal event was followed by eight weeks of appearances at hospitals and rest camps around the city.

Europe’s group is remembered today principally for its instrumental performances and for the singing of Noble Sissle, but it mounted stage shows as well. For instance, during its first month away from the regiment, “The fine Army band of American Negro musicians came over from Aix-les-Bains and put Chambéry in a whirl of excitement. A concert was given in the theater under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A., and the house was crowded to the doors and every seat in the orchestra occupied by American soldiers. A minstrel show was part of the programme, and the two end men, in traditional minstrel togs, cracked jokes, danced, and sang songs, with a chorus and band to support them. The wild applause of the audience worked the actors into a perfect frenzy of cake walks, hand-springs, and grotesque gestures, and the curtain dropped on a roar of excitement from soldiers and actors alike.”

The record of the band under Mikell is less easy to trace, and in that respect its history is quite similar to those of the other bands in the 92nd and 93rd divisions. Nonetheless, though he tends to get snubbed in later accounts that focus on Jim Europe, Mikell did valuable service. Indeed, in June, 1918 he was honored in his own right at a ceremony where he received a baton presented by a French regimental bandmaster. On July 4, 1918, in one of its most prestigious engagements under his leadership, Mikell led the

---

294, which reports that “An American Negro band led the American soldiers who returned from their first experiences in the trenches in a parade at Aix-les-Bains, France.”

64 Outlook, v.118/16 (April 17, 1918), p. 621, from an article by correspondent Pauline Sands Lee, who wrote from from Chambéry on February 24, 1918.

65 New York Age, June 15, 1918, p. 6 (“Bandmaster Mikell is Presented With Baton”).
band in a concert at General Gouraud’s headquarters in Chalons-sur-Marne. In mid 1918 Mikell enjoyed the army’s boost in rank for bandleaders to Second Lieutenant, and he remained with the band---and Europe came back to it---when all the regiment’s other black officers were removed later that summer.66 The band was returned to its regiment and pulled back from public engagements after its stint in Paris, keeping a low profile for its last three and a half months overseas while other bands took the spotlight. Jim Europe returned to the U. S. not as a combat officer, but as an officer in his regiment’s Headquarters Company.

The other preeminent black regimental band of World War I, Will Vodery’s 807th Pioneer Infantry Band, began its overseas service with a taste of combat: “when we arrived in a certain part of France we were carrying ammunition to the front under fire.” Its “climactic success” really began, though, when the band was detached from its regiment to be the First Army Headquarters Battalion Post Band. This was the most distinguished and lengthiest assignment undertaken by any of the black regimental bands, in which capacity it played all over France. The opportunity was created when on October 16, 1918, General John J. Pershing turned over personal command of the million-man US First Army to General Hunter Liggett, who commanded it until April 20, 1919. Naturally, Liggett then needed his own headquarters band independent of Pershing’s, and a competition was set up for the position, which was won when Vodery’s band beat out four other (white) regimental bands.67 The band of the 807th transferred to First Army Headquarters on November 13, 1918. Based first at Souilly near Verdun and then at Bar-sur-Aube in the countryside southeast of Paris, close by to Pershing’s own headquarters at Chaumont, Vodery’s men served as First Army Headquarters Band for five months until the First Army was dissolved in April. In early 1919, Vodery stepped away for two months to do the 66 Noble Sissle, who held the rank of sergeant and drum major, while primarily performing as a singer, had to leave the 369th to become a staff officer with the 370th when he received his officer’s commission in the fall of 1918 in France. He performed again with the 369th back in the US in early 1919 before Europe’s death. The modern secondary literature sometimes credits Sissle with actually conducting the band, thereby mis-identifying him with Mikell.

67 Letter from Sgt. Charles L. Thorpe, printed in the New York Age, January 4, 1919, p. 6. General Pershing also determined to have a new band, a large, all-star AEF GHQ [General Headquarters] Band recruited from the various regiments. Simple racism rearing its head again, no members of any black regimental band were taken for this group.
Bandmasters course at nearby Chaumont, and a Vodery letter shows that after the course he expected to return to the states with First Army Headquarters personnel. Instead, in late April, he and the band were sent back to their regiment, which had missed them sorely and which was now at Bourg, Haute-Marne.

A few references indicate the caliber of event for which Vodery’s band provided entertainment in this assignment.\textsuperscript{68} It represented the American Army at a reception for French President M. Poincaré and Mme. Poincaré at Verdun on November 20, 1918, when Poincaré was travelling to join Marshalls Foch and Petain for the ceremonials entries into the liberated towns of Alsace-Lorraine. Poincaré “said it was the first colored band he had ever heard and its music was astounding.”\textsuperscript{69} On December 5, the band played while General Liggett decorated eight aviator aces at Souilly. On January 8, it played at the services in honor of Colonel Roosevelt at which General Liggett and General Drum and staff were present (Theodore Roosevelt had died on January 6). Further, during January the band played at one of the Catholic Cathedrals, and it also played privately on January 19 for the Prince of Monaco at his chateau, at which occasion "the Prince expressed particular pleasure in Negro music.”\textsuperscript{70} And on March 21, they played for Gen. Pershing, his staff and guests, the king and queen of Belgium, at Lignol, the chateau that was Lieut. Gen. Hunter Liggett’s headquarters near Bar-sur-Aube.\textsuperscript{71} On April 6 they played for General Pershing at Bar-sur-Aube. And they also made tours of base hospitals, of course.\textsuperscript{72}

Vodery’s outfit was very much a theater troupe as well as a concert band, and it could mount at least two different shows. A description of one of the shows performed in Bar-sur-Aube in January mentions comedy sketches, a saxophone quartet, a comedian, and a song-and-dance routine.\textsuperscript{73}

\textsuperscript{68} All material in this paragraph is taken from the Chicago \textit{Defender}, May 24, 1919, p. 4 and Philadelphia \textit{Tribune}, June 14, 1919, p. 1, except where noted.
\textsuperscript{69} Vodery letter of Nov. 22, 1918, printed in the New York \textit{Age}, December 21, 1918, p. 6; New York \textit{Age}, January 4, 1919, p. 6.
\textsuperscript{70} \textit{The Crisis} 17/6 (April, 1919), p. 294.
\textsuperscript{71} \textit{Cleveland Gazette}, April 26, 1919, p. 3; see also New York \textit{Times}, March 22, 1919, p. 3.
\textsuperscript{72} \textit{The Crisis} 17/4 (February 1919), p. 194.
OTHER BANDS OF THE 93RD DIVISION

What of the other bands attached to the black combat divisions? The regiments of the 93rd Division were the first to go “over there,” embarking between December 1917 and April 1918, beginning with the 15th N.Y. All served at the front under French command. With the exception of Jim Europe’s, their bands stayed close by the trenches. George Dulf’s great Chicago band of the Old Eighth Illinois, now the 370th, was particularly famed for its experience close to the action. On October 13, troops of Chicago’s 370th were the first to enter "the French city of Laon when that fortress fell after four years of German occupation . . . [and] Bandmaster Dulf led the band that marched at the head of the regiment into Laon . . . " . . . "playing French national airs as it marched, and finally breaking into "The Star Spangled Banner," then "Yankee Doodle," and finally "Dixie"."74 Then, in the drive on the Rhine in November it was the only band to go over the top (at Metz), and “played ‘Illinois’ in the very teeth of German guns.” Another often-told anecdote recounts how they held a concert in what was supposed to be a quiet sector, at Bar-le-Duc, near Verdun, while an unexpected airplane battle raged overhead between French and German aviators and it rained down shrapnel. In later November, in ceremonies after the Armistice, they played at the particular request of Marshalls Foch and Petain and General Pershing. They also gave a special concert at Brest for General Pershing before he sailed home to the States.75 When Noble Sissle received his promotion to Lieutenant in October 1918, he was transferred from the 369th to the 370th to become an officer in this regiment’s Headquarters Company.

The bands of the 371st and 372nd did not leave significant anecdotes in U.S. sources concerning their activities while overseas.

BANDS OF THE 92ND DIVISION

The seven regiments of the 92nd Division all sailed later than those of the 93rd, embarking for the war in June 1918, and all served under U.S. command, spending on

---

74 Kansas City Sun, February 15, 1919, p. 1.
75 Chicago Tribune, February 15, 1919, p. 10; San Francisco Chronicle, October 5, 1919, p. E5; Grand Forks Herald, December 24, 1919, p. 10; Cheyenne State Leader, January 7, 1921, p. 5.
average about nine months overseas, only the first five of which came before the Armistice. Of the bands of the three Field Artillery regiments, those of the 349th and 351st seem to have made little widespread impact. Tim Brymn’s 350th Field Artillery Band, however, achieved significant recognition. Before the big fall offensive, "General Pershing ordered the band to make a tour of the entire front, for it is known that music has more to do with sustaining the morale of the soldiers than almost any other medium." Then, returning to camp and its regiment, the band was at hand in the bloody Argonne and Metz drives in fall 1918, and by Brymn’s account, at one point they had to put down their instruments to fight. They served at the battles of Eply, Pontamousson, and Marbach. Croix de guerre winners included six bandsmen, among them Sergeant Heyder, clarinet, Bobby Jones, percussion, and Corporal Russel Smith, cornet. "In spite of the intensive fighting which never let up, Lieutenant Brymn kept his musicians in constant rehearsal." Further, "they served their country by driving ammunition trucks to the front line trenches, as well as by inspiring their comrades by their music." After the Armistice, the band won recognition as "the only colored aggregation of musicians to appear before President Wilson and General Pershing by special request during the tour of the battle front by the country’s Chief Executive prior to the opening of the peace conference." And "when President Wilson visited France last Christmas time, he expressed a desire to hear the Black Devil Band, and when they played for his entertainment at the sector which he visited at holiday time, the Chief Executive hailed the organization as the peer of all colored aggregations." Away from the front, in concert, they played special engagements in Nancy, Marseilles, Bordeaux, Brest, and other cities. In addition, we know that Brymn’s band played for three weeks at a base hospital in Paris and at General Pershing’s great review of the 92nd Division together

---

76 Harrisburg Telegraph, April 5, 1919, p. 13.
77 Binghamton Press, January 26, 1922.
80 Philadelphia Inquirer, March 19, 1919, p. 3. Wilson arrived on December 13, so this would have been at some point between mid December 1918 and early January 1919.
81 Harrisburg Telegraph, April 5, 1919, p. 13.
with President Wilson on January 28 at Le Mans. Further, the memoirs of drum major Willie “the Lion” Smith mention a visit of the band to the rest area at Aix-les-Bains.82

The famed activist and author W. E. B. Du Bois went over to France shortly after the Armistice, sailing from New York on December 1, 1918 to be an observer at the Versailles Peace Conference. While in Paris he helped organize the Pan-African Conference in February 1919 to coincided with the Peace Conference, and headed home in late March 1919. In early January, Du Bois visited the 92nd Division in the Marbache sector, in Maron on the Moselle River below Metz, just west of Nancy. Du Bois, in a famous editorial for The Crisis, described the impact of Brymn’s band in evocative language:83

"In France . . . Tim Brimm was playing by the town pump. Tim Brimm and the bugles of Harlem blared in the little streets of Maron in far Lorraine. The tiny streets were seas of mud. Dank mist and rain sifted through the cold air above the blue Moselle. Soldiers—soldiers everywhere—black soldiers, boys of Washington, Alabama, Philadelphia, Mississippi. Wild and sweet and wooing leapt the strains upon the air. French children gazed in wonder—women left their washing. Up in the window stood a black Major, a Captain, a Teacher, and I—-with tears behind our smiling eyes. Tim Brimm was playing by the town-pump."

Chicago’s 365th has left fewer traces of its experiences abroad, but a late summer 1918 letter from France to the Indianapolis Freeman from drummer Jasper Taylor, written shortly after his arrival overseas, speaks about playing popular music—-love songs and jazz numbers—-and also standard band selections for the boys.84 After the Armistice, band member Ben Jackson wrote home to a friend an account that details some of their whereabouts. Just before the unit "went over the top" with the band doing hospital service under shell fire, they were at Soisy, about four kilometers from Pont a Mousson, which is twenty-seven kilometers from Metz. (They were close by to the 350th at this moment.) They moved up to Atton for the attack, and then returned to Pont a Mousson. They moved again on December 5 to another unnamed town where they stayed for a month, and then

---

84 Indianapolis Freeman, September 28, 1918, p. 2 (“A Black Hun Chaser Writes From France”), cited in Miller, Some Hustling, p. 52.
billeted at Ambrières in January before embarkation at Brest. Now the "Old Eighth" was located nearby.\textsuperscript{85}

The band of the 366th seems to have kept a low profile on shore, though it was a shipboard favorite,\textsuperscript{86} and neither the bands of the 367th under E. E. Thompson nor of the 368th under A. Jack Thomas generated many references back in the U.S. to their activities while abroad. We do, however, have a photo of the band of the 367th serenading Generals Pershing and Gouraud in the summer of 1918.\textsuperscript{87} And we know that the band of the 368th played concerts “in Toul, Saizerais, Nancy, Brest, Le Mans and other places,” but also were on the scene for combat on three fronts—-in the Vosges, in the Argonne forest, and at Metz. In the Argonne fighting in September, bandsmen had to put down their instruments to become stretcher bearers and first aid men, and to bury the dead, and they also were slightly gassed.\textsuperscript{88}

PIONEER INFANTRY BANDS

The African American Pioneer Infantry regiments sailed from August through October 1918, in time for only just five (802, 805, 806, 807, 808) to assist in the final bloody assaults on German positions. Arriving so much later than the combat regiments, they also stayed on the continent much later—-deep into the summer months of 1919—-to work on cleaning up the debris and scars of war. As the entire 92nd and 93rd Divisions pulled back to the port areas and returned to the states in February and March 1919, demands on the Pioneer Infantry regimental bands increased both to entertain the remaining troops and to serve on ceremonial occasions. These bands, too, varied widely in \textsuperscript{86} It reportedly played a concert every night on board the USS Covington on the way to France and on board the Aquitania on the way home (on-line biography of Henry Frank Smith (1892-1960), version of 11/01/2006, at home.earthlink.net/~gskwink/InHonor.html, accessed 06/04/2013). For another reference to the concerts on the Aquitania, see also Adele Logan Alexander, \textit{Homelands and Waterways: The American Journey of the Bond Family, 1846-1926} (New York: Pantheon Books, 1999), p. 421.

\textsuperscript{87} New York \textit{Age}, September 14, 1918, p. 6; Sweeney reprints it between pp. 112-113. The publication date suggests that this was an event of July/August/earliest Sept.
\textsuperscript{88} New York \textit{Age}, Feb 22, 1919, p. 6; \textit{The Southern Workman}, vol. 48 (April 1919), p. 254. Toul, Saizerais, and Nancy are near each other in the Lorraine, close to the front. Le Mans is in the west on the way to or from Brest and St. Nazaire. talent and accomplishment. Vodery's great band of the 807th was discussed above. I will just mention a few more below that have left some significant trace of overseas activity.

The band of the 803rd was "eventually detached from their regiment and sent touring . . . . entering everybody from Alsace-Lorraine to the Mediterranean." It played, for example, at a reception for the civilian population of Challes-les-Eux on March 12, 1919, and it was photographed with Addie Hunton in Chambery on March 18, 1919 while on special duty in the leave area. They were a tremendous hit. "These men gave us so much joy and entertainment in their playing that not only did the Y make efforts to have them retained permanently in the Leave Area, but the French people were quite as eager to have them, and showered praises and flowers on them when at last they were ordered back to their regiment." Its extensive tours throughout France made this band one of the most popular in the A.E.F. and allowed it to claim the mantle of "the best band in France."

The band of the 805th had to have been among the very last to have been formed in the wartime US army, since it only received instruments on January 1, 1919 at Chateau de Chehery, Chatel Chehery, where the regiment was in residence from November 25, 1918 to May 2, 1919. The 805th had enrolled a large number of skilled musicians and minstrel/vaudeville actors, and they now went to work immediately to put together some concert repertoire and a vaudeville show. Lieutenant Leonce R. Legendre (white) was in charge of the show and the band, with George L. Polk as Assistant Band Leader and conductor. The regiment "became famous overnight" for the Bear Cat Entertainers show and for a section of the band that was spun off as a Jazz Orchestra. Their Colonel Humphrey later boasted that his Bear Cats had "the best Jazz band in France," "the best vaudeville show in the A. E. F.," and the best baseball team of any outfit in France. From February to May 1919 they entertained many distinguished visitors at Chatel Chehery and went on the road to many French villages around the Argonne-Meuse area, with famous Kansas City

89 Hunton and Johnson, Two Colored Women, pp. 171, 220-21, with a photo of the band taken at Chambery between pp. 222 and 223; another image from that photo-session at Chambery, made into a postcard, was formerly visible on the internet at www.usmilitaryforum.com (accessed 12/15/2010). A third often-reproduced photo of the band shows them in Brest on board the troop transport U.S.S. Philippines just prior to their return to the United States; see, for example, the image as preserved in the Library of Congress, Gladstone Collection (www.loc.gov/exhibits/odyssey/archive/07/0705001r.jpg, accessed 12/15/2010).
90 Chicago Defender, June 14, 1919, p. 9; Chicago Defender, June 21, 1919, p. 20.
professional comedian, actor and singer Billy Higgins, promoted from private to color sergeant, as their principal soloist.91

The band of the other Kansas City area Pioneer Infantry regiment, the 806th, got off to a start that was almost as slow. It was not organized until after the Armistice in November, and started with borrowed instruments until the men of the regiment could purchase some for their band. They played music composed by their Assistant Band Leader, the well-known trombonist Ashford Hardee, until sheet music could be ordered from home. Of course, it too, was "now the best band in France."92 Stationed with the regiment in early 1919 at Montrichard, just east of Tours, the band was sent to Paris in March or April of 1919 and stayed there until their return to the states in August. An ensemble of 32 pieces, it was remembered by its Lawrence Denton, the other of its conductors, as playing light classical selections like the two famous overtures by Franz von Suppé, "Morning, Noon, and Night" and "Poet and Peasant." In May and June, the men of the 806th regiment helped to build Pershing Stadium, and then “the 806th Pioneer Infantry Band played at the Columbus Stadium in Paris, giving daily concerts during the A.E.F. tryouts for the Inter-Allied Meet.”93

Baltimore’s 808th Pioneer Infantry band under Native American “Chief” Wheelock was proclaimed for bringing "the real America Jazz, as it should be played, over here,” to France.94 And it was celebrated for staying close to the troops:

"This band of colored musicians has indeed upheld the tradition of its race, for their music contributes much to make the name of the 808th Pioneer Infantry popular at the front. To begin with, they are right at the 91 See Bliss, History of the 805th, op. cit.; Hunton and Johnson, Two Colored Women, p. 223; Emporia Gazette, July 11, 1919, p. 3; Kansas City Sun, May 3, 1919, p. 8.

92 Kansas City Plaindealer, April 18, 1919, p. 4, in an anonymous letter of March 6, 1919 from a bandmember.
93 Charles H. Williams, Sidelights on Negro Soldiers (Boston, 1923), p. 155; see also Thisted, p. 43. The Inter-Allied Games were 22 June to 6 July, 1919, at Pershing Stadium, but one of the sponsors was the Knights of Columbus, hence also "Columbus” stadium. Units of the 806th helped construct/renovate the stadium and site. See Williams, p. 154, H&J, p. 154, and The Inter-Allied Games, Paris, 22nd June to 6th July, 1919, ed. George Wythe and Joseph Mills Hanson (Paris: published for the Games Committee by Société anonyme de publications périodiques, 1919). The black bands did not directly participate in the festivities and ceremonies of the Inter-Allied Games themselves.
94 Baltimore Afro-American Ledger, November 29, 1918, p. 4.
front being only a few kilometers behind the line, and although in danger of attracting the attention of hostile forces, they realize that the spirit of the boys must be kept cheerful and refreshed. So, often they assemble in a well protected spot and play for the constant line of khaki as it moves along the road toward the enemy.”

After the Armistice, when the bands of the black combat regiments had embarked for home, Wheelock’s unit remained in camp and garnered all the prizes: the band of the 808th was judged the best infantry band in the A.E.F., white or black, in a contest held at Camp Pontanezen, Brest, France, on June 2, 1919. Additionally, it won the signal honor of playing for President Wilson’s departure for home from Brest on June 29, 1919. Lieutenant Wheelock returned to the U. S. as an officer in his regiment’s Headquarters Company.

The 814th Pioneer Infantry regiment was one of the very last US army regiments to go overseas and one of the first to return, leaving the states in the first week of October 1918 and returning just two months later. While abroad, the regiment was split, partly going to England to build a railroad, and partly to France to do stevedore work (NYT, January 25, 1919, p. 11: working with the Service of Supplies in France). The band and the companies that went to England were housed in Winchester. From that base, the famous forty-two-piece band of the 814th Black Devils "toured and established a long-to-be remembered reputation in various cities and towns in England." By one report, during their two months in England "the band visited London several times. On one of their trips they played in the Palace Theatre in the act of Miss Elsie Janis. They also played in Winchester Cathedral, at the request of the caretaker, to the guests at that time in the

---

95 Hunton and Johnson, Two Colored Women, pp. 223-224.
96 Hunton and Johnson, Two Colored Women, pp. 223; Genoa Indian News, October 1919, p. 6.
97 There is a famous Western Union photo of the band of the 814th taken upon its return, immediately after disembarking onto the docks on December 18, 1918. Incidentally, the "Black Devils" sobriquet, given to all the U.S. black combat troops by the Germans, first turns up in June 1918 in reference to the entire 92nd Division. While still in training camp in Kentucky in late summer of 1918, the 814th want to claim it as their nickname, and they used it as such even though they never received formal authorization. Both the 370th and the 350th appropriated it upon their return to the US in spring 1919, as will be mentioned below. Time: The Weekly Newsmagazine, Letters Supplement (a.k.a. Letters: Published Fortnightly by Time, Inc.) 1/17 (September 17, 1934), p. 2. building." According to Time magazine, the most conspicuous wartime service of the 814th was rendered by its regimental band, "a collection of superb musicians and entertainers who took London by storm. Its most famous members were Drum-Major Julius ("Slim") Williams and Corporal Charles ("Egg Shell") Fleming, both expert buck-&-wing dancers. The high point of their visit was a command performance at Buckingham Palace, which brought a letter of commendation from King George." A widely disseminated AP wire-service anecdote dated London, Saturday, November 16 and first printed in many US papers on November 18 must also be about them: "when another colored band from The States went to London to head a parade of American and English soldiers, and halted at Buckingham Palace, it is said that King George V and Queen Mary heard the lively airs with undisguised enthusiasm and were loath to have the players depart for the park where they were scheduled for a concert, with a dance engagement, under British military control, to follow."

Hunton and Johnson remembered the bands of the 815th and 816th for playing in the rest areas and at the dedication of the Meuse-Argonne American Cemetery in Romagne, France by General Pershing on Memorial Day, May 30, 1919: "Then came the 815th with their fine Western pride and spirit playing their way, too, into the heart of the Area. We met them again at Romagne when, with the band of the 816th Pioneer Regiment, they were playing daily to counteract the depressing influences of their surroundings. We stood near them and watched with tear-filled eyes as they paid their humble homage on that memorable thirtieth of May when General Pershing had come to dedicate that largest

---

99 Southern Workman 48/8 (August 1919), p. 417. Elsie Janis (1889-1956) was "the Sweetheart of the AEF".

100 Writing so long after the fact, Time's 1934 account (see note 64 above) possibly may confuse the performance of the band of the 814th with the royal command performances of the Southern Syncopated Orchestra and the Original Dixieland Jazz Band at Buckingham Palace in the second half of 1919.

101 Chicago Tribune, Nov. 18, p. 5 and dozens of other papers around the country over the next four weeks; see also Scott, Official History, p. 303. The Cleveland Gazette, November 23, 1918, p. 1, prints a paraphrase of this news item with the additional claim that the band was in fact that of Jim Europe and the 369th Infantry playing for the American Day celebration of the signing of the Armistice, a unique embellishment for which there is no further corroboration. military cemetery. We were with them again at the Port of Brest where, with their wonderfully stirring music they, too, fought in that battle for morale.”

* *

Before discussing the return of the black regimental bands to the United States after the Armistice, two loose ends will receive some attention here. The first concerns additional black military bands that came to Europe as part of the war effort, and the second concerns issues having to do with the rank and qualifications of bandmasters.

ADDITIONAL BANDS

Other units in the army also had bands. This is true, for example, of Engineer regiments and service battalions, and labor battalions and companies, all of whom worked for the Army’s Service of Supply and its Quartermaster Corps, as did stevedore regiments and battalions. Some of these non-combatant units, including their bands, were staffed by African Americans. For example, there were at least eight Army Service Corps bands, and the Army Service Corps 1st Band was a colored band. The 317th Engineers Regiment (colored), attached to the 92nd Division, had a celebrated band under Thomas E. Green, who came to it from the regular army, where he had been leading the band of the 24th Infantry. The band was referred to in the New York Age, which reported that the 317th Labor Battalion, Quartermaster Corps, was colored and had its own band, though their 102 Hunton and Johnson, Two Colored Women, pp. 221-22. The band of the 815th was there because "members of the regiment had charge of burial of large numbers of American dead in the cemetery at Romagne-Sous-Montfaucon, France" (Pueblo (Col.) Chieftain, August 7, 1919, p. 4). A band member of the 816th, Vernon L. Page also mentioned playing for the dedication of the cemetery on Memorial Day 1919 (Kansas City Sun, July 5, 1919, p. 8).

103 Anthony Pendleton Taylor (1894-1957) is an African American ABL, according to genealogy and US Veterans Gravesites data. His dates of service are July 3 to December 7, 1918. According to his gravestone and his U.S. National Cemetery Interment Control Form, he was Asst. Band LDR 49 CO 151 Depot Brigade.
104 Chicago Tribune, July 31, 1919, p. 9.
105 New York Age, August 3, 1918, p. 2; Los Angeles California Eagle, January 2, 1941, p. 3-A. Emmet Scott’s list of Negro organizations that served overseas refers to the 317th as a Labor Battalion on p. 316 but as the 317th Engineers on p. 482; the labor battalion is undoubtedly the engineers under a different name.
commentator remarked, “I do not believe there is another Labor Battalion in France with a band.” The Evansville Courier reported it to be a band of twenty-eight "which has attracted wide attention," and further that "the talent of the 317th labor battalion for entertaining has long been recognized" and that the battalion would be mounting a show that would appear at Chambery.

Regarding stevedores, an article for the New York Age mentions a band of 50, all of whom worked on the docks until the armistice. The Seattle Daily Times, in an article with a wonderful title ("French Go Supperless to Hear Yankee Bands"), also mentions that "one of the most popular and best-known American bands in the "Service of Supplies" in France is composed of the negro stevedores." This may be the same band referred to in the New York Age, which may in turn be the band that Hunton and Johnson single out as the St. Nazaire band, “encouraged by the YMCA,” that played under Assistant Band Leader Sergeant Stevenson. Stevenson died at Chambery from a fall in 1919. St. Nazaire was a principal port for troops and supplies, and was home to many army units of white and black laborers, while Chambery was a furlough spot for African American soldiers from January to May 1919. Apparently, the St. Nazaire band was visiting the Leave Area when Stevenson had his fatal accident.

RANK AND QUALIFICATIONS

Issues concerning the rank and qualifications of bandmasters are of significance in the story of the black U.S. Army bands in World War I. A first point has to do with designated rank. Before WWI, army bandmasters were enlisted men---effectively, sergeants. In 1916, the position of Chief Musician was officially renamed Band Leader, with an Assistant Band Leader serving immediately under. Following a suggestion of General Pershing, military orders issued on June 1, 1918 required that the U.S. Army's Band Leaders receive temporary officers' commissions. Those with over five years of service as

---

106 New York Age, March 29, 1919, p. 2.
109 Seattle Daily Times, December 1, 1918, p. 27.
110 Addie W. Hunton and Kathryn M. Johnson, Two Colored Women with the American Expeditionary Forces, p. 222, with a photo of the St. Nazaire band between pp. 222 and 223.
leader were made first lieutenants, and those with less, including all new appointments, were made second lieutenants. Thus all the Band Leaders in the 92nd and 93rd Divisions became Lieutenants, a small but noteworthy addition to the number of black officers.\footnote{After the war, all bandleaders who did not muster out reverted to enlisted rank. The present day ranks of Warrant Officer (from 1920) and Chief Warrant Officer (from 1941) were created later. William C. White, A History of Military Music in America (NY: Exposition Press, 1944; repr. Greenwood Press, 1974), p. 98-101.} Drye and Europe had won previous appointments as line officers, not as musicians, so each of their bands also had a sergeant (later Lieutenant) Band Leader. Tim Brymn was later always described as the first of the bandmasters to receive his appointment as 2nd Lieutenant, and that appointment came on June 22, 1918.

Recall that the Pioneer Infantry regiments were organized from June to September 1918, thus after implementation of Pershing’s new orders. They all had white officers, so with the sole exception of Vodery and Wheelock (and remember, Wheelock was white in the army’s eyes), their conductors were left at the rank of sergeant in the position of Assistant Band Leader, answerable to a white lieutenant from Headquarters Company who was not necessarily a musician at all; no commissioned black Band Leader was ever appointed.\footnote{These white lieutenants apparently did not hold formal Band Leader appointments; they were on the regimental headquarters staff and oversaw the band but did not get closely involved with the musicians. To date I have found the names of only two (Legendre with the 805th and Maxom with the 814th). Lawrence Denton’s comments about his time in the 806th capture the situation clearly: “I made assistant bandleader and the bandleader was a white fella, lieutenant ... We only saw him about once a month. He left everything to us” (Pearson, Goin’ To Kansas City, p. 18). Hunton and Johnson (p. 28) tell an anecdote about an otherwise unidentified black band with a white leader, and they describe the St. Nazaire band as led by its black Assistant Band Leader.} Moreover, in July 1918 the American Expeditionary Force adopted a policy whereby segregated black units had to have either all white or all black officers; no units were to have a mix of races among their officers.\footnote{Badger, A Life in Ragtime, p. 190.} This policy was relaxed for black band leader Lieutenants in units with otherwise all white officers, as in the case for Mikell in the 369th, and for Jim Europe upon his return to the band of the 369th in August 1918, and for Vodery with the 807th.

A second point about the U.S. Army’s bandmasters and army bands in Europe concerns bandmaster qualifications and education. General Pershing, despite all the demands on his attention, found time to review the condition of the military bands under his command in the spring of 1918 and found many in need of improvement. First steps were taken by the orders of June 1, 1918, which not only called for the promotion of band leaders to officer rank but also for the enlargement of regimental bands from 28 to 48 men, and the addition of a drum and bugle corps. The general level of mediocrity amongst conductors was not so easily dealt with. White or black, able bandmasters were in desperately short supply, and the knowledge and abilities of those brought into the army varied considerably. By coincidence, it was precisely at this juncture that famed American conductor Walter Damrosch came to France in June 1918 to engage a French orchestra for concerts at the soldiers’ rest camps. Pershing, learning of his presence on the continent, summoned him to his headquarters in Chaumont to consult. One immediate result of their discussion was the decision that bandsmen would no longer have to be pressed into service as stretcher-bearers.\footnote{After Pershing and Damrosch consulted, bands were officially relieved of litter work by General Order 139, A. E. F., but bandsmen continued to serve in this capacity anyway right through the last great offensives. See the experiences of the bandsmen of the 368th cited above and see also the Gustafson diary on-line, and the Savannah (GA) Tribune, March 1, 1919, p. 1 for the experiences of the bandsmen of the 371st as first aid men and stretcher bearers.} More consequentially for bandmasters, Damrosch agreed to examine all of them to evaluate their competency.

A. Jack Thomas and E. E. Thompson were among the 200-odd bandmasters (by one report 240, of whom 229 were white and 11 non-white) who took Walter Damrosch’s examination for army musicians in Paris over several weeks in July 1918.\footnote{Citation needs to be entered. The number eleven for black bandmasters accounts for all of the eleven combat regiments.} Only eight whites and Thomas and Thompson passed.\footnote{Baltimore Afro-American, March 10, 1928, p. 9 (“Members of 368th Infantry Band Back 9 Years Friday”), with details probably contributed by Baltimore resident A. Jack Thomas. The number of eleven non-whites fits the eleven black combat regiments. At the time of Damrosch’s examination, the Pioneer Infantry regiments and their bands were just in the initial stages of formation in the states.} Damrosch explained the chastening results to Pershing and subsequently took the leading role in establishing an army bandmasters school in Chaumont that operated from November 1, 1918 to June 1, 1919. The course of study lasted eight weeks.\footnote{Damrosch’s own detailed account can be read in \textit{The Etude} 38/3 (March 1920), pp. 151-52: “The Musical Aftermath of the Great War: An interview secured especially for The Etude with the distinguished conductor Dr. Walter Damrosch.”} It was attended by A. Jack Thomas and Will Vodery in late 1918 and early 1919, not both at the same time, before they returned with their units to the US. Most probably, Thomas attended in November and December; Vodery attended from February through early April. Vodery recalled being the only African American among the 40 in his class, who were drawn by competitive examination from a pool of 162 applicants. Both Thomas and Vodery did outstanding work there.\textsuperscript{118} Vodery, in particular, not only earned his commission there but was "the Honourman of the A. E. F. School for Bandmasters."\textsuperscript{119}

\begin{center}
\textit{*}
\end{center}

\textbf{POST WAR RETURN AND THE LURE OF TOURING}

After mustering out back in the U.S., most of the doughboys, including bandmen, dispersed immediately back to homes, families, and jobs. Of the regimental bandmasters, Norman Scott had died in France of pneumonia, and his replacement, Burnit McReynolds, returned to the 10th Cavalry. All the other bandleaders mustered out of the army. Of them, only Dorcy Rhodes later re-entered active duty, in 1926, as bandmaster of the 9th Cavalry. About equal numbers took up civilian careers in education and in the entertainment industry. A. Jack Thomas retired from his lengthy military career and immediately founded a symphony orchestra and the Aeolian Conservatory in Baltimore. Drye returned to Tuskegee and Mikell to the Bordentown School, Rhodes took over the Howard University band, Wheelock went out to the Genoa, NE Indian Industrial School, Brown returned home to Kentucky to teach in a career that eventually took him to Harlem’s famous PS 186, and Polk accepted a position at the St. Joseph Industrial School. Wesley I. Howard returned to Europe for a year of study and then began a career at Howard University. Louia Vaughn Jones opened a private studio in Boston for two years, then went to Europe; he came back to the US in 1930 to teach at Howard. Thompson, Vodery, Cason, White, and Stewart were among the many who picked up the threads of their individual careers in the field of entertainment.

\textsuperscript{118} Vodery letter to Alex Rogers in the New York \textit{Age}, June 7, 1919, p. 6 ("Vodery Makes Highest Mark of the Bandleaders"); reprinted by Mark Tucker, "Vodery," pp. 181-82.
\textsuperscript{119} Philadelphia \textit{Tribune}, June 14, 1919, p. 1.
The greatest of the black regimental bands hoped for stateside work in early 1919 based on their wartime reputations. Expectation was building (at least in the East Coast press, which paid little heed to Chicago) about those led by Europe, Brymn, Thomas, and Thompson. An article entitled “Colored Military Bands To Delight American Audiences” proclaimed that “With the return of colored regiments from France we are soon to have in our midst race military bands galore. Of course, each regiment will claim honors of having the best band.” With pride at stake, getting out ahead of the field was going to be important from the moment the transports docked. Without a guarantee of immediate work, though, bands were sure to evaporate after demobilization, especially if the bandmen were of geographically diverse backgrounds. An anecdote is telling here: in the case of Brymn’s band, it was reported that the men got a signal from shore before they even disembarked that confirmed they would have work.

The most exciting prospect for turning fame into fortune was through touring, presenting black music and musicians to white audiences in large concert halls and theaters patronized by whites, for a middle class who wanted to hear what had gotten the foreigners so worked up overseas. The black military bands not only brought jazz to France, but in a very real sense, they also brought jazz to American as well. From March through May of 1919, they played for larger and more diverse audiences than had ever heard this music before.

Touring in the states was virtually terra incognita for the bands, though. There was exactly one model for such a large enterprise and it was of remarkably recent vintage. Hoping to build a "movement to exploit Negro music," Will Marion Cook announced in September 1918 a proposed tour by sixty instrumentalists and singers of the New York Clef

---

120 New York Age, February 22, 1919, p. 6. The article proposed that "This mooted question [of who is the number one black military band] might be decided by staging a big band contest some Sunday evening at the Hippodrome."

121 Harrisburg Patriot, April 5, 1919, p. 7: "When the Black Devil Band neared the dock in New York City they espied the figure of Captain Carl Helm, their white friend and mentor, standing upon the string piece of the wharf. They let out a yell which could be heard a mile or more, for they knew that he was on the job, and that their American tour was assured."

122 On Will Marion Cook, see now "Chronology and Itinerary of the Career of Will Marion Cook: Materials for a Biograph," on-line at http://digitalcommons.unl.edu/musicfacpub/66/
Club in November that would take them to ten of the nation's largest cities.\textsuperscript{123} This tour never got off the ground. In all likelihood, the logistics were beyond Cook's ability and experience to manage at the time. Meanwhile, for the grand benefit for the 367th Infantry at the Century Theatre on October 27, 1918, Cook, the musical director, had to work closely with George W. Lattimore, the general director of the event. Cook had found his professional manager. By later November or early December, the two of them contracted together to run a new organization, the New York Syncopated Orchestra (NYSO), which went out on the road for ninety days between January 30 and April 30, 1919, completing two circuits out to Chicago and back. Rather than move at the pace of a vaudeville show or Broadway road company, the NYSO travelled to the rhythm and tempo of a Sousa band-style tour, that is, on the move daily, with daily matinee and evening concerts at each stop, hitting many small towns as well as the biggest halls in the largest cities. Entertainer Tom Fletcher, who was a member of the company, recalled that the NYSO tour was “the first time an orchestra of this kind had ever toured the country,” and he reported that Cook’s ambition was for it to be “the greatest thing ever done by colored people.”\textsuperscript{124}

Cook’s initially thwarted notion and its realization under Lattimore’s management shows us how important it was that an investment be made in professional planning for ambitious and complicated tours. Further, it shows that the planning process needed to have begun well before the bands landed. As far as major US tours, only three bands---those of Dulf and Europe from the 93rd Division and Brymn from the 92nd Division---were able to arrange to make extensive, immediate tours for profit as private citizens, and as we will see, only Dulf and Brymn were able to keep their bands more-or-less intact thereafter for an extended period. The tour routes of Cook and the NYSO, Brymn and the 350th "Black Devils" Band, Europe and the 369th "Harlem Hellfighters" Band, and Dulf and the 370th "Black Devils" Band are given in Appendix III.

The other two great bands of the 92nd Division---those of the 367th and 368th---came up in the conversation about touring but did not take the plunge. And the Pioneer \textsuperscript{123} New York \textit{Age}, September 21, 1918, p. 5; Washington \textit{Bee}, September 21, 1918, p. 8; \textit{The Crisis} 17/1 (November 1918), p. 32 (repr. in \textit{Caxton's Weekly} (Seattle), November 23, 1918, p. 3).

Infantry bands, returning so much later in 1919, never became a part of this enterprise---not even Vodery’s 807th, the band that some thought surpassed any other band that ever went to France.\textsuperscript{125}

Anticipating that E. E. Thompson would tour with the band of the 367th, one observer speculated that “there should be some interesting musical moments the next few days when the “Buffalo” musicians return and find the organizations of the 368th and 369th already on the field.” The 367th, however, running a few weeks behind the others in the process of demobilization, and apparently without strong stateside sponsorship, opted out of touring. Instead, Thompson and his “Buffaloes” played at the Manhattan Casino on April 9 and then at Carnegie Hall for a benefit on May 3 under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A., but never again re-assembled.\textsuperscript{126} In the fall, Thompson went to work for Will Marion Cook and George Lattimore. A rejuvenated version of Cook’s New York Syncopated Orchestra, renamed the Southern Syncopated Orchestra, had sailed for England in May and June 1919 and had been playing in London since July. Thompson joined the orchestra in England as conductor in place of Cook in October 1919, and he remained with it for most of two-and-a-half seasons, leading it---often in uniform---into late 1921.\textsuperscript{127}

A. Jack Thomas of the 368th was said to be “planning to organize a concert band from the best musical talent in the 92nd Division,”\textsuperscript{128} but that notion also never came to fruition. Instead of wrestling to hold his men together and organize a tour after they mustered out on March 9, he opted to settle down in Baltimore by early April. Thomas announced the opening of the Aeolian Conservatory on April 23, and he also organized a \textsuperscript{125} Chicago Defender, June 21, 1919, p. 4. At the least, Vodery’s band was expected to make a grand parade up Lenox Avenue when it got home (Chicago Defender, May 24, 1919, p. 4), but homecoming, once anticipated for May, ended up being in late July, and there was no parade, much less any touring.

\textsuperscript{126} There is a long article on the Buffaloes and Thompson, with a photo of Thompson, in the New York Age, April 5, p. 6-7, in anticipation of concert of April 9. The May 3 concert was reviewed in the New York Age, May 10, 1919, p. 6, and see also the Chicago Defender, May 10, 1919, p. 4.

\textsuperscript{127} On the complicated and sometimes dramatic history of the SSO and its personnel, the essential starting point is now Howard Rye, "The Southern Syncopated Orchestra," Black Music Research Journal 29 (2009): 153-228, with substantial additional information on its roster, itinerary, and more addenda by the same author in Black Music Research Journal 30 (2010).

\textsuperscript{128} New York Age, February 22, 1919, p. 6; see also Badger, A Life in Ragtime, p. 204 and p. 308, n. 9.
symphony orchestra there by April 27. Drum Major Landin and the Jazz Band made a few prominent appearances, however, culminating in a farewell in Baltimore on the nights of April 21, 22, and 23. Further, “a section of the regimental band of the 368th Infantry” played in Washington, DC, at Howard University’s commencement in June, a major event which incorporated a celebration of that institution’s fiftieth anniversary.

What of the three bands that did tour? These seasoned ensembles were indeed out of the gate in a hurry. By coincidence, Dulf’s and Europe’s regiments were not only celebrated in monster parades led by their respective bands in Chicago and New York on the very same day, February 17, but both bands set out on tour one month later, again on the same day, March 16. Further, as late as March 29, it was reported that the regimental bands of the Old Eight and the Old Fifteenth would appear in New York in a joint recital, and the hyperbolic report rhapsodized that "Never in the history of the country has such a gigantic undertaking been tried as the tour of these Military bands." Brymn, not far behind these first two, began touring on March 19. Dulf did not wrap up until at least May 22, while Jim Europe’s tour was to end at some point soon after the May 9-11 concerts in Boston, and Brymn’s on May 18. As the New York Clipper reported it, "the end of the war has brought into booking offices a large number of musical soldier shows, vaudeville acts and jazz bands that are making records almost everywhere when it comes to getting money." And the New York Age boasted of "Colored Attractions Winning O.K. of Broadway Audiences."

Taking up first the continuing story of the “Old 8th Illinois,” Dulf took his “Black Devils” of the 370th on the road for over two months from mid March through late May 1919, expecting to hit as many as 50 major cities. From New Orleans they headed north, then swung east through Columbus, Toledo, and Cleveland into Pennsylvania, and then down the East Coast from Baltimore and Wilmington at least as far south as Greensboro.
and Richmond. The band was assisted by another Chicagoan, the nationally-famed African American coloratura soprano Anita Patti Brown (1881-1950), along with band veterans Frank A. Dennie, tenor soloist, and Charles A. Brady, cornet virtuoso. Their show also featured the decorated war hero Lieut. Samuel S. Gordon, himself awarded the Croix de Guerre, who narrated stories of the exploits of the regiment and its band. On their stop in Cleveland, "Selections from grand opera were appreciated by the audience . . . but when the boys played the popular jazz music the audience became so excited that, had it not been Sunday, there might have been dancing. Many encores were demanded. They were always answered with more jazz."\(^\text{135}\) Staying together after the tour either as the "Black Devils" or as the "Famous Eighth Illinois Band," they continued to take engagements that summer, playing, for example, in St. Louis on Friday, August 15 for the annual meeting of the National Negro Business League, and then playing at the Lexington, KY, Colored Fair for a week beginning August 17. (They were to return to this Lexington venue in August 1920.) Brymn’s band was also the "Black Devils," so an advertisement in the Chicago Defender during the spring tour makes clear that Dulf’s band was the real deal: "Beware! Genuine "Black Devils" are 370th Inf. Old Eighth Illinois Regiment Band/ Geo. Dulf, Conductor/ With Anita Patti Brown, soloist/ Now En Route -- Watch for Date."\(^\text{136}\)

Most important to the story of Dulf’s long-standing band, though, is that in September 1919 a second spinoff of the former New York Syncopated Orchestra was created in the United States by Will Marion Cook, which he called the American Syncopated Orchestra [ASO].\(^\text{137}\) The ASO absorbed Dulf and some of Dulf’s men, was based in Chicago, and was represented in newspaper stories as a direct continuation of the 370th. It was to have played privately under Dulf for President Wilson in Wichita on September 29, 1919 to kick off its first extended tour, but that opportunity was lost due to Wilson’s stroke and sudden return to Washington by train from Wichita on the 27th. Cook returned from Europe so that he and Dulf could share conducting duties with the ASO from late November

---

\(^\text{135}\) Cleveland Gazette, April 12, 1919, p. 3.
\(^\text{137}\) Confusingly, the New York Syncopated Orchestra’s first offshoot, the Southern Syncopated Orchestra, was occasionally called the American Syncopated Orchestra by British papers (sometimes as a title, and sometimes meaning simply the Syncopated Orchestra from America).
1919 to mid January 1920, after which he returned to Europe. Dulf kept the ASO going for a second winter season over 1920-1921, touring nationally at least into February 1921.\textsuperscript{138} In both seasons it essentially traced the same general route as the Western vaudeville circuits of the Orpheum and Pantages organizations, which ran from Chicago north through the Twin Cities into Canada, then west to the Pacific Coast and south from Vancouver and Seattle to Los Angeles and San Diego. Of all the black regimental bands back from Europe, Dulf’s travelled the farthest and enjoyed the most geographically diverse audience.

Tim Brymn, who had led the biggest, wealthiest band overseas, mounted a major publicity campaign for his tour back in the States. In the newspaper ads, Brymn was “Mr. Jazz Himself,” his band was “The Overseas Jazz Sensation” or “Europe’s Jazz Sensation,” and his concerts were “A Military Symphony Engaged in a Battle of Jazz.” He also favored the “Black Devils” moniker, but Dulf and the 370th having claimed it first, Brymn distinguished his ensemble by calling it the “70 Black Devils.” He and a band of seventy made a two-month eastern and midwestern tour from mid March to mid May featuring vocal soloist Josephine Dean and saxophone soloists from the band. They began with a homecoming debut on March 19 in Philadelphia and an appearance shortly thereafter in Trenton, then swung west through Pennsylvania into Ohio and east again for a triumphant grand finale on May 18 at the Casino on Broadway at 39th Street in New York City. For this event, the papers called them “The Band All New York Has Been Waiting to Hear.” Madame Ernestine Schumann-Heinck herself was on hand that evening at the Casino Theatre to welcome them.\textsuperscript{139}

After the spring tour, Brymn kept going for at least three years an ever-shrinking “Black Devils” band of first 70, then 50, then 20, or even only a half dozen men, mostly playing at clubs and hotels in the New York area. Just three days after their tour ended, on Wednesday, May 21, they were a headline act in the huge national Salvation Army Doughnut Day Drive, playing a noontime concert at New York’s Pennsylvania Station. Most significant for their wallets, though, were two three-month, high-profile residencies to accompany stage shows and dancing at a famed nearby resort, the Hotel Shelbourne at Brighton Beach on Coney Island in the summers of 1919 and 1920. (Noble Sissle recalls that this booking was initially to have been filled by Jim Europe’s band).\textsuperscript{140} Brymn claimed that only the flattering offer of the Brighton Beach contract kept the band from embarking on a world tour in concert.\textsuperscript{141} Between summers at the Shelbourne, the band kept busy with stints opposite Sophie Tucker at Reisenweber’s Cafe at Columbus Circle in September and October 1919, and at Proctor’s 125th Street Theatre in February 1920. Brymn’s band was also a headline attraction in an extravaganza in Madison Square Garden in September 1920 as one of the live acts on a bill featuring the world premiere of the silent film biopic of Babe Ruth, \textit{Headin’ Home}. The Sherbourne then renewed their contract for an additional six months from October 1920 into April 1921. In the spring of 1921, Brymn took a small group of Black Devils into an Okeh Records recording session, marched with a larger group at President Harding’s inaugural parade (March 4, 1921), and later served as composer and musical director, with a pit orchestra of 20 Black Devils, for the Broadway colored review \textit{Put and Take} (August 23-September 23, 1921). In January 1922, Brymn was one of a group of six Black Devils who played the Binghamton, NY auto show. By November 1922, however, he had stopped using the name Black Devils for his bands and orchestras, although he held on proudly to his uniform and to the title "Lieutenant" for the rest of his career.

\textsuperscript{138} The Ogden (UT) \textit{Examiner}, January 11, 1921, p. 4; etc., etc., to San Jose, Cal. \textit{Evening News}, Feb. 9, 1921, p. 7 and Feb. 17, 1921, p. 2; San Jose \textit{Mercury News}, Feb. 6, 1921, p. 14 and Feb. 17, 1921, p. 8.

Lieut. Jim Europe, the "Jazz King," took on the road the most famous band of them all, the “369th Infantry Hell Fighters’ Band,” in what was planned to be a nine-week tour of more than two dozen cities. Advertising copy for the Pathé recordings that the band made in March says "this famous overseas band is now making a triumphal tour of the country from Maine to California, playing every matinee and evening to packed houses."\textsuperscript{142} In the end, that tour lasted only eight weeks, from March 16 to May 11, 1919. (After Europe’s death on March 9, the concerts on March 10 and March 11 went on as scheduled under the baton of Felix Weir. It had been expected that the tour would be followed by trips to all the major cities of the US and Canada, and then across the Atlantic. And then, after the death of Jim Europe, "the members of the band, under direction of Felix Weir, expect to make a national tour, the proceeds to go for the erection of a monument to the memory of the great musical director," a tour that did not take place.

\textsuperscript{140} Sissle, "Memoirs," p. 224.
\textsuperscript{141} New York \textit{Age}, October 9, 1920, p. 5 ("Lieutenant J. Tim Brymn’s Interesting Musical Career").
\textsuperscript{142} \textit{The Music Trades}, May 3, 1919, p. 34.

Just who and how many Hell Fighters bandmen there were that spring is a question with no one firm answer. Immediately before the tour, Europe took a group of about twenty men into the recording studio for Pathé, while for the Manhattan concerts he led an "augmented regimental band" of eighty or more, almost double the size of the overseas ensemble of forty five, and the travelling ensemble was advertised as a band of sixty five. The Hell Fighters Band travelled west from Boston as far as Indianapolis, St. Louis, and Chicago before retracing its path back to Boston, with the anticipation of a grand finale in New York City.

The 369th band's itinerary regularly crisscrossed with the paths of the Dulf and Brymn bands and Will Marion Cook's New York Syncopated Orchestra. For example, Brymn’s men played Philadelphia on March 19, and Europe's men played the same city on the very next night. Newspaper ads for both ensembles were very aware of the near head-to-head match-up, and ads were juxtaposed next to each other in the papers, with Tim Brymn's advertised claim to be "Europe's Jazz Sensation" being countered by Jim Europe's advertised warning: "Do Not Confuse the Greatest of Jazz Bands with any other Trading on the name of Europe." And an Associated Negro Press story out of Chicago on May 8 celebrated the extraordinary juxtaposition in that city of concerts in the loop district on the same night---Monday, April 28---by Cook’s orchestra at Orchestra Hall, Europe's band at 143 Boston Herald, May 8, 1919, p. 8; Boston Herald, May 10, 1919, p. 1; Boston Herald, May 11, 1919, p. 6; Chicago Defender, May 17, 1919, p. 1. According to Billboard, in a brief article dated May 17, Felix Weir was Europe's successor, "and the remaining concerts will be given as originally scheduled" (Billboard, May 24, 1919, p. 5), but this is not what then transpired.

---

144 Dallas Express, May 24, 1919, p. 1.
145 On the numbers of personnel, see Reid Badger, "Performance Practice," and see also Tim Brooks, Lost Sounds: Blacks and the Birth of the Recording Industry, 1890-1919 (Urbana: University of Illinois Press, 2004), pp. 280-92. In any event, moreover, neither the touring band of Jim Europe nor those of Dulf or Brymn were manned exclusively by their own veterans.
146 Philadelphia Inquirer, March 19, 1919, p. 3.
the Auditorium, and the band of the 365th under Sergeant Albert Jones at the Grant Park Victory Arch just off Michigan Boulevard ("Colored Musicians Have Chicago Charmed").

After Europe’s death and the conclusion of the Boston concert series, rather than tour under Felix Weir, the group was immediately disbanded and its musicians thrown out of work. Noble Sissle turned down a suggestion that he take over the band and lead a reduced ensemble of fifteen on a vaudeville tour on the Keith circuit. Instead, Mikell stepped in at this juncture. He assumed formal leadership in June and kept the Hell Fighters Band going on and off for a total of six more years in conjunction with his teaching career. Mikell had hoped to tour in the fall with the band, but that plan never came to fruition. Rather, he began with individual concerts in New York City on June 15, June 27, July 11, July 26-27, August 14, and September 26, 1919, followed by a concert on January 25, 1920 in Providence, Rhode Island, and one on May 11, 1920 in New York. The group then went on hiatus for two years, as Mikell became more and more involved with teaching.

Complicating the history and legacy of the Hell Fighters’ Band is a situation that was partly national, partly local in significance. For at least six months in 1917-1918 there were two 15th N.Y. National Guard regiments and two bands, the “old” and the “new.” The new 15th N.Y. was re-established for local home service in the fall of 1917 before the old 15th had even left the states. A band for it was quickly formed and began to concertize under Frederick Ward Simpson, who earned a National Guard commission as Lieutenant. Upon the return of New York area veterans in early 1919, a vigorous effort was made to sign them up for the new guard regiment and its new band. Furthermore, with the "old"

147 Dallas Express, Saturday, May 10, 1919, p. 1.
150 The New York Age, June 21, 1919, p. 6 (“Mikell Now Leader of “Hellfighters” Band”).
151 New York Age, October, 11, 1919, p. 5
152 Providence News, January 26, 1920, p. 4
154 After the 1920-1921 school year, Mikell, who had been commuting out from Manhattan, left the Bordentown School altogether and concentrated on his professional school teaching and Clef Club duties in New York City. He had been made conductor of the Clef Club Orchestra, and he led it at the Lt. Europe Memorial on May 15, 1921; in January 1922 he led it in a concert at Carnegie Hall.
15th/369th regiment demobilized, the new 15th N.Y. was now the official service band for events memorializing that combat unit. Simpson's group soon was able to advertise that "among the musicians were a number of overseas veterans." It represented itself as "The Colored Band of War Fame," "The Famous New York Fifteenth Infantry Band of 45 Musicians 'From Harlem to the Rhine'," "the band that won all the jazz prizes in England, France and Italy," and "the successor to the famous 15th Infantry Band which served overseas."

On January 5, 1921, a veteran white officer of the old 15th and 369th, Col. Arthur W. Little, was appointed commander of the new 15th and began vigorously to increase the size and resources of the regiment. His initiatives included a major campaign for a new armory, the renaming of the new 15th as the 369th, and a new direction for its band (for which he had a special place in his heart, because as regimental adjutant with the 369th in France he had accompanied it on its February-March 1918 tour). For most of his first year he kept Fred Simpson as bandmaster, so that, for example, Simpson led the regimental band in the new 15th's first major parade march after the war, a huge event up 5th Avenue in May 1921. In December 1921, however, Lieut. Simpson was succeeded by Lieut. Will Vodery as band director, with Lieut. Noble Sissle as band manager. Simpson's ensemble then took on different sponsorship, immediately affiliating in a body with Monarch Lodge No. 45 of the Improved Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks of the World (colored) and becoming the Monarch Band. For the gala affair of January 20, 1922 that marked the 155 The historic armory of the 369th Regiment still stands at 142nd Street and Fifth Avenue. The site for the armory, and initial funding, were announced in July (New York Age, July 16, 1921, p. 1): a parade and cornerstone-laying ceremony took place on May 27, 1923 (New York Times, May 28, 1923, p. 7; New York Age, June 2, 1923, p. 1).

156 As the nation's premiere black Elks band, also known as the Monarch Symphonic Band or the Mitee Monarch Band, it was for two subsequent decades a large, popular, and active ensemble that came together fairly frequently for concerts, especially in the summer months on the Central Park Mall, and in a monthly winter concert series. New York Age, February 28, 1939, p. 7, etc. The Elks band’s long-time drum major was Gillard Thompson, who previously had succeeded Noble Sissle in this position with the band of the 369th during the war. Gillard Thompson later served as President of the Monarch Band, Exalted Ruler of the Monarch Elks Lodge, and Commander of the Dorrance Brooks Post of the V.F.W., while also becoming the first ten-year veteran of the new 369th National Guard regiment. Modern secondary sources sometimes confuse Gill Thompson with Bill "Bojangles" Robinson, and attribute Thompson’s service record to the great tap dancer who became Harlem’s honorary mayor. (Thompson began with the 15th as a sergeant in Headquarters Company, then took a demotion to private so that he could serve in combat as a rifleman from May renaming of the regiment as the ("new") 369th, the regimental band was led by Will Vodery. Just how many of the performers that night were veterans, or were simultaneously members of the Elks band, is not known.

Memories were long and loyalties were strong, moreover. It was never forgotten that the Monarch Band was formerly the band of the 15th, and it held on to some of Jim Europe’s veteran bandmen. Over the better part of the next two decades it concertized extensively, frequently participated in VFW events in Harlem, and enjoyed a national reputation as Elksdom’s Champion Band. In the second half of 1940, when National Guard soldiers were called up across the nation and Harlem’s 369th regiment became the 369th Coastal Artillery, the New York Home Guard was formed for stateside service with a new African-American 15th Regiment as one of eight New York City regiments. Simpson and the Monarchs immediately became its official band.

Meanwhile, Colonel Little, concerned for the welfare of the veteran bandmen, began in the spring of 1922 to pursue the idea that a smaller ensemble, consisting just of veterans, might be able to find full-time work. This evidently did not mesh with the professional schedules of Vodery and Sissle, who stepped out of the picture, and it was to Mikell that Colonel Little turned to see if the band could again be a professional operation that could provide significant, steady income to its players. The Hell Fighters Band started full-time work in late June 1922 with three weeks of daily afternoon concerts in Manhattan’s Park Avenue Hotel. In July it began a vaudeville try-out with the B. F. Keith organization, playing first at a theatre in the Bronx, then at one in Harlem, and then on to a Broadway debut at B. S. Moss’s Broadway Theatre, playing “several of the newest jazz songs as well as a stirring march and a classical operatic selection.” It finished out August in vaudeville at Proctor’s Fifth Avenue Theatre. In September, Mikell brought thirty men to Chicago for a four-week engagement playing with the new Creamer and Layton show Strut Miss Lizzie. This was followed by a stint on the regional vaudeville circuit from October to November 1918, then returned to the rank of sergeant in Headquarters Company to succeed Sissle as drum major. In March 1919, it was Thompson who led the entire 369th regiment up Fifth Avenue in the homecoming parade. Bill Robinson never joined the army or left the states and can be continuously traced on the vaudeville stage during the war years.) The "identity theft" may go back to Charters and Kunstadt.

__________________________

1922 through January 1923 with the Keith organization that took the band from New York to New Jersey and Philadelphia, and then north to Proctor’s theatres in Amsterdam, Albany and Schenectady. Full-time work could not be sustained beyond these seven months, but the unit continued to play prominent individual engagements, most memorably when it provided the music for a grand ceremony in Manhattan on August 13, 1923 paying tribute to French general Henri Gouraud. In 1923 the band also played at an international polo match out on Long Island, and took a vaudeville engagement for a week at the Loew’s Theatre at 9th Avenue and 110th.

After Mikell’s effort to sustain the Hell Fighters Band as a commercial concern came to an end, he continued to lead it as a National Guard band for two more years, through most of 1925, until he retired from the guard shortly after Colonel Little. Late that fall the band was put into the hands of Mikell’s current second in command, long-time band member and now Warrant Officer Jacob W. Porter, who led it for eight years, until late 1933. It was then conducted for a short while by Arthur W. Phillips. Russell Wooding (1891-1959), the well-known bandleader and arranger, was appointed to direct it in 1936, and he revitalized the ensemble. After the call to active duty in 1940 it boasted of being “the greatest military swing unit organized in any United States Army camp,” and laid claim to “a colorful and interesting history . . . following and upholding” the tradition of Jim Europe.

SUMMING UP

Making a longitudinal study across of all the new black US Army regimental bands in World War I has not dislodged James Reese Europe and the Hell Fighters Band from their pre-eminent position. But it allows us to see better how all of the new bands were essentially the progeny of George Edmund Dulf and the band of the Old Eighth Illinois, and how those ensembles which toured the states after their return were following the very recent model of Will Marion Cook’s NYSO tour, as scheduled and booked by George W. Lattimore. There will surely be profit in digging deeper into newspapers, memoirs, and 157 All 1922 references. New York Times, June 22, 1922, p. 8; etc.

---

158 New York Age, October 13, 1923, p. 6.
159 Baltimore Afro American, October 11, 1941, p. 13, and Time Magazine, March 17, 1941.
archives both in America and abroad to establish more detailed itineraries for every band that went abroad. Nonetheless, the extended, cumulative contributions of the Pioneer Infantry regimental bands especially emerge now in greater clarity than heretofore, as do the individual roles of some of the less well known bandmasters.

The new jazz was the special thing that most distinguished these bands musically, and everyone claimed it as their own. It was not just Jim Europe’s band that brought jazz to the continent; rather, it was something on the order of two dozen bands. Moreover, they played the jazz of Kansas City, Chicago, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington as well as that of New York City. Upon the return of the bands from the war, touring back in the States brought the new jazz music to dozens of smaller cities and towns, and to white audiences who had never before heard these exotic, lively sounds. The response was strong and positive. By one report, “Since the return of colored military bands from France to these shores the country simply has gone wild about jazz music.” By another report,

'There’s music in the air,' and it has been placed there by the members of the race: their orchestras and bands, military, civilian, and jazz. There are three aggregations, however, that are making history in the way of happy feeling; they are: the old Eighth Regiment band, Chicago; the old 15th Regiment band, New York; and the New York Syncopated Orchestra. These are under the direction of George Dulf, James Reese Europe, and Will Marion Cook, respectively. These organizations, of more than fifty men each, have been touring the country in recent months and 'setting the people wild' by their rare entertainment and music. The white people have fallen in line and are hurrahing everywhere for race music, instrumental and vocal.

---

160 An impromptu concert by the regimental jazz band of the 809th during a one-hour layover in a Harrisburg, Pa., railroad yard, for instance, drew a big front page headline and favorable comment in the local paper. See the Harrisburg Patriot, July 21, 1919, p. 1.

161 New York Age, May 3, 1919, p. 6 ("Jazz Music is Now All the Rage Throughout United States").

162 Baltimore Afro-American, Friday, May 2, 1919, p. 4; the by-line on the article was sent out by the Associated Negro Press from Chicago on May 1.
Far from having exhausted the market after their initial burst of touring from March into May 1919, the ensembles built by Dulf, Brymn, Europe, and Cook continued to perform, and to hold onto their reputations and their military and racial identities, for several additional years. Will Marion Cook’s American Syncopated Orchestra (a.k.a. the Eighth Chicago or the Old Eighth) under Lieut. George Dulf toured nationally into early 1921, while Cook’s Southern Syncopated Orchestra under Lieut. E. E. Thompson toured internationally until late 1921. Lieut. J. Tim Brymn led an aggregation of Black Devils into mid 1922, and Lieut. F. Eugene Mikell led the veterans of the Hell Fighters’ Band on tour into early 1923. Only after these terminal dates did the activities of the Chicago and New York National Guard regimental bands again become of exclusively local significance.

Something on the order of a thousand African American bandsmen mustered in and out of the twenty-seven new black regiments of the US Army between 1917 and 1919. Proud of their service, they held fast to rank and title, performed in National Guard and VFW bands in later life, and arranged to be buried, together with their wives, in US veterans cemeteries. Among the bandmasters and bandmen, a significant few, familiarized during wartime with life among foreigners, went back abroad as civilians to enjoy the enthusiasm for their music and the relative lack of racism that they had experienced "over there" as soldiers. Not undertaken for this essay, but certainly worthwhile to canvas, on account of how tenaciously the military holds onto its traditions, would be the story of the revival of bands in black regiments with important World War I musical traditions as part of the army’s mobilization for participation in World War II---a story seen in microcosm in the later history of the band of the 369th. Time and circumstance have conspired to canonize James Reese Europe and the 369th, but in his day the nation’s black and white communities, and the U.S. Army, followed the exploits, attended the concerts, and honored the memory of his peers as well.
APPENDIX I: LEADERSHIP TEAMS in the BLACK REGIMENTAL BANDS

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Division</th>
<th>Band Leaders (BL Lieuts.), Assistant Band Leader (ABL Sgts.)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>92nd Division</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
| 349th Field Artillery Reg. | BL Lieut. Norman Delafield Scott (1888-1918)
                             BL./ABL Lieut. Burnit McReynolds (1887-1959)
                             Bnd Sgt. & Sgt. Bugler Walter Ringo |
| 350th Field Artillery Reg. | ABL Lieut. J. Tim Brymn (1879-1946)
                             ABL Sgt. William Blue
                             Drum Major William H. Smith
                             Bnd Sgt. Russell T. Smith
                             Bnd Sgt. George W. Hyder
                             Bnd Sgt. Ruppert A. Benjamin |
| 351st Field Artillery Reg. | BL Lieut. Dorcy Rhodes (1887-1951)
                             ABL Sgt. Berry A. Claytor (1893-1967)
                             Bnd Sgt. Horace B. Wallace (1889-1962)
                             Bnd Sgt. Leon J. Carter (1891-1952)
                             ABL/Sgt. Clifton M. Davis |
| 365th Infantry Reg. | Lieut. Frank L. Drye (1889-1957)
                             BL Lieut. Arthur T. Steward (b. 1891)
                             ABL Sgt. Albert H. Jones
                             Bnd Sgt. Roy E. Barnett |
| 366th Infantry Reg. | BL Lieut. John L. Grinnell (c. 1885-1969)
                             (Was sgt. in camp in US; from 10-Cav. Band)
                             ABL Sgt. George Triggers (1890-1966)
                             Bnd Sgt. Earl C. Cason (1893-1970) |
| 367th Infantry Reg. | BL Lieut. Egbert E. Thompson (1883-1927)
                             ABL Sgt. Nelson L. Kincaid (1888-1956) |
| 368th Infantry Reg. | BL Lieut. Alfred Jack Thomas (1884-1962)
                             ABL Sgt. Prince A. Venable (1887-1961)
                             Drum Major Edgar A. Landin (1891-1966) |
| 93rd Division | Band Leader, etc. |
| 369th Infantry Reg. = 15th NY | Lieut. James Reese Europe (1880-1919)
                             BL Lieut. F. Eugene Mikell (1880-1932)
                             ABL Sgt. Frank De Broite (b. 1874)
                             Drum Major Sgt. Noble Sissle (1889-1975)
                             Drum Major Gillard Thompson (1886-1939)
                             Bnd Sgt. Rafael I. Duchesne |
| 370th Infantry Reg. = 8th Illinois | BL Lieut. George E. Dulf (1872-1943)
                             ABL Sgt. Charles Dorsey
                             Drum Major Sgt. F. Blue (acc. EJ Scott)
                             Bnd Sgt. Charles Alexander (in 1917)
                             Bnd Sgt. Oliver E. Perry (in 1917) |
| 371st Infantry Reg. | BL Lieut. Elbert B. Williams (1864-1929)
                             ABL Sgt. Anderson Douglass, Jr.
                             Bnd Sgt. Major James T. Baker
                             Bnd Sgt. Major John D. Jones |
372nd Infantry Reg.

BL Lieut. Salmon P. White (1867/68/69-1943)
ABL Sgt. Steward W. Goines (1894-1945)
Bnd Sgt. Raymond Sheldon
Bnd Sgt. Lawrence E. White
Bnd Sgt. George Scott

*******
Pioneer Infantry Regiments 801-816

801st Pioneer Infantry
---
Bnd Sgt. Cyrus A. Evans
Bnd Sgt. Elbridge H. Reed
Sgt. Bugler Harry I. Long

802nd Pioneer Infantry
---
ABL Sgt. Oliver Harrison Mead (1888-1978)

803rd Pioneer Infantry
BL/ Bnd Sgt. Major Edward W. Bailey (1890-1983)
ABL George E. Jefferson
Bnd Sgt. Alfred J. Taylor (1892-1944)

804th Pioneer Infantry
BL Sgt. Arnett Nelson (1892-1979)
ABL Sgt. James L. Kirk (1893-1974)
Bnd Sgt. Major Byron H. Williams (1895-1959)
Bnd Sgt. Major Homer L. Johnson
Bnd Sgt. Major George H. Young

805th Pioneer Infantry
“Bear Cats”
BL Lieut. Leonce R. Legendre (white; 1895-1951)
ABL Sgt. George Lee Polk (1890-1951)
Drum Major Middleton Brooks Polk (1891-1981)
Bnd Sgt. Robert J. Hill ( - 1943)
Bnd Sgt. Cesco H. Johnson (1889-1951)
Bnd Sgt. John Pleasant Rathman (1893-1967)
Bnd Sgt. Ulric L. Washington (1894-1978)

806th Pioneer Infantry
---
ABL Sgt. Ashford Henry Hardee (1889-1956)
Bnd Sgt. Maj. Leroy G. Moore
Bnd Sgt. Lawrence Denton (1893-1986)
Bnd Sgt. James Cox
Bnd Sgt. Elmer J. Stirman

807th Pioneer Infantry
“Pioneers”
BL Lieut. Will H. Vodery (1885-1951)
ABL Sgt. Charles L. Thorpe, Jr.
ABL Sgt. Ralph S. Redmond (1890-1960)
ABL Sgt. Louia Vaughn Jones (1895-1965)
Band Sgt. /Drum Major Opal Dee Cooper (1889-1974)

808th Pioneer Infantry
BL Lieut. James Riley Wheelock (1874-1941)
BL Sgt. James B. Clark
ABL Sgt. Leo H. Davis (1895-1981)

809th Pioneer Infantry
BL Lieut. Charles W. Bushman (white; 1891-1950)
ABL Sgt. Eugene V. Freels (1890-1956)
ABL Bnd Sgt. Wesley I. Howard (1889-1962)
Bnd Sgt. Lucion Ramseur (1886/88-1969)
Bnd Sgt. Earl D. Washington (1892/93-1973)

810th Pioneer Infantry
(no service in Europe)
Bnd Sgt. Major Ira D. Oliver (1889-1969)

811th Pioneer Infantry
BL Sgt. Albert J. Foster (black)
ABL Sgt. John L. Davis
Bnd Sgt. John W. Brown
Bnd Sgt. Edwin Harold Hopper

812th Pioneer Infantry
(no service in Europe)

813th Pioneer Infantry
--- (BL not yet found)
--- (ABL not yet found)

814th Pioneer Infantry
"Black Devils"
BL 2nd Lieut. Roy Maxon (white; 1894-1952)
ABL Sgt. Ralph E. Brown (1893-1989) [ or “W. E.”]
Bnd Sgt. Julius C. Williams

815th Pioneer Infantry
---
ABL Sgt. George W. C. Morgan (1895 - )
Bnd Sgt. Ulysses S. Everly (1889-1938)
Bnd Sgt. Floyd Fitch
Bnd Sgt. Ernest R. O’Reilly
Bnd Sgt. Edward C. Morgan

816th Pioneer Infantry
---
ABL Sgt. Amos M. White (1889-1980)
Bnd Sgt. Charlie Hoops
Bnd Sgt. Frank Hatton
Bnd Sgt. Roy J. Monroe
Chief Trumpeter Vernon L. Page (1897-1957)

Commentary:

The appendix provides a list of all the black combat and Pioneer Infantry regiments, with the names of as many of their identifiable Band Leaders, Assistant Band Leaders, and Band Sergeants as I have located to date. Some were singled out in publications by contemporaries such as Emmett Scott, Maud Cuney-Hare, or Hunton and Johnson as making an especially noteworthy contribution.

Band Sergeant Major (BSM) is, I believe, essentially equivalent to Assistant Band Leader. I think the way it works is that the ABL is always some kind of sergeant, and the highest-ranking sergeant the ABL could be is BSM. I may mistakenly provide the name of a BN Sgt. (Battalion Sgt) above, thinking that Bnd Sgt was meant.

--------

Mobility in the combat regiments:

Wallace (351st) was a Musician First Class when outward bound and a Band Sgt. when homeward bound; U.S. Veterans Gravesites information calls him BAND SGT or SGT.

Nelson Kincaid left for Europe as a private and returned as Assistant Band Leader in the 367th.

Noble Sissle eventually left the 369th to return home as an officer (Second Lieutenant) with the 370th.

Mobility in the Pioneer Infantry band ranks:

Oliver Harrison Mead leaves NY on a troop transport in 1918 as a private in the 802nd Headquarters Company (presumably a musician) and returns from Brest in 1919 as Asst Band Leader.
H&J give William Bailey for 803rd but the individual in question is actually Edward Walter Bailey; in at least one record he is ABL, but the Army Transport Service passenger lists name him as BL of the 803rd both outward and homeward bound.

Arnett Nelson leaves as pvt and returns as Band Leader of the 804th.

Ashford Hardee leaves as pvt and returns as Band Leader of the 806th.

Redmond is said to be the ABL with Vodery’s 807th (in the New York Age, etc.) when Louia V. Jones is simply a member on violin and saxophone. At some point, Redmond moves to another band or steps aside (he returns to the US early and demobilizes in May), and Jones gets late promotion.

In the 807th, Opal Cooper sailed to Europe as a private and returned as a Band Sergeant.

In the 808th, Wheelock moved into a Headquarters Company leadership role after his promotion to Lieutenant, and the BL position went to Clark, with Davis as ABL.

In the 809th, I have seen a ref. to Wesley Howard as ABL but in transport records he is outward bound as a private and homeward bound as a Band Sgt.

In the 809th, Eugene Freels is outward bound as a private and homeward bound as ABL.

--------

It was announced that Charles Harris (b.1875), leader of the Commonwealth Band of Baltimore and a central figure in the African American musical community of that city, was “appointed assistant band leader and will soon go to France with one of the colored organizations. After six months, he will be made a second lieutenant” (Topeka Plaindealer, October 4, 1918, p. 1; New York Age, October 5, 1918, p. 2). I have seen no additional evidence that this was ever followed through, and in all likelihood, it is because of the Armistice and the return of troops.
APPENDIX II: FULL BAND ROSTERS

Full rosters for most of the black regimental bands are now able to be assembled from U.S. Army Transport Service troop ship passenger lists. There are usually two: bound for Europe in 1917 or 1918, and then returning to America in 1919. Given below are rosters for four of the most important bands, namely those of Tim Brymn and the 350th, Jim Europe and the 369th, Edmund Dulf and the 370th, and Will Vodery and the 807th.

Rosters are otherwise hard to come by. An exception is Paul S. Bliss, Victory: History of the 805th Pioneer Infantry, American Expeditionary Forces (St. Paul, Minn.: the author, 1919), pp. 65-67, 208, which gives a full roster for the band of the 805th, including photos and hometowns.
350th Field Artillery Regiment
Headquarters Company Band
SS President Grant June 30, 1918
Leaving Hoboken

In all, Brymn plus 37.

Brymn, James T. BL
Blue, William Asst. BL

De Leon, George A. Band Sgt.
Benjamin, Ruppert A. Band Sgt.
Hyder, George W. Band Sgt.
Smith, Russel T. Band Sgt.

Van Rensalier, John Band Cpl.
Howard, Lionel H. Band Cpl.
Jackson, Arthur H.K. Band Cpl.
Martin, John D. Band Cpl.

Atkinson, Walter G. 2nd Cl Mus.
Brooks, Ciffoya A. 3 Cl Mus.
Brown, William A. 1 Cl Mus
Coleman, Howard C. 3rd Cl Mus
Crummal, Englemar L. 2 Cl Mus.
Dupre, Louis A. 2 Cl Mus.
Fitzgerald, Wesley O. 3 Cl Mus.
Hernandez, Ramon M. 2 Cl Mus.
Jackson, James A. 3 Cl Mus.
Martin, Nelson C. 2 Cl Mus.
Major, Addington D. 1 Cl Mus.
Morrison, Henry E. 3 Cl Mus.
Moore, James T. 1 Cl Mus.
Parris, Gilbert J. 1 Cl Mus.
Pinder, Arthur 3 Cl [Mus.]
Purnell, George T. 3 Cl Mus.
Revey, James R. 1 Cl Mus.
Reynolds, Stephen W. 3 Cl Mus.
Scott, Joseph T. 3 Cl Mus.
Smith, Cecil 2 Cl Mus.
Smith, Raymond 3 Cl Mus.
Smith, Samuel S. 3 Cl Mus.
Thompson, Henrico A. 3 Cl Mus.
Williams, James C., Jr. 3 Cl Mus.
Wilson, Andrew C. 3 Cl Mus.
Winder, James B. 3 Cl Mus.
Young, James C. 2 Cl Mus.

William H. Smith of Newark, New Jersey (stride pianist Willie "the Lion" Smith), with wife Blanche Smith, was a Corporal in Battery A on this voyage. By secondary accounts, he acted as Drum Major when the band marched, but while the Brymn band was in his division, he was not officially a part of it or of the Headquarters Company.
350th Field Artillery Regiment
Headquarters Company Band
USS Maui February 16-28, 1919
Brest to Hoboken

In all, Brymn plus 48.

Brymn, James T. 2nd Lt.
De Leon, George A. Sgt. Bugler

Blue, William Asst. BL

McCall, Leonard E. Sgt.

Benjamin, Ruppert A. Band Sgt.
Hyder, George W. Band Sgt.
Smith, Russel T. Band Sgt.

Van Rensalier, John Band Cpl.
Howard, Lionel H. Band Cpl.
Jackson, Arthur H.K. Band Cpl.
Martin, John D. Band Cpl.

Atkinson, Walter G. 2nd Cl Mus.
Brooks, Clifford A. 3 Cl Mus.
Brown, William A. 1 Cl Mus
Brown, Clarence B. 3 Cl Mus.
Cannon, Leo L. 3 Cl Mus.
Cole, Harry F. 3 Cl Mus.
Coleman, Howard C. 3rd Cl Mus
Cook, George W. 3 Cl Mus.
Crummal, Englemar L. 2 Cl Mus.
Dupre, Louis A. 2 Cl Mus.
Fitzgerald, Wesley O. 3 Cl Mus.
Harley, Chalmers 3 Cl Mus.
Hernandez, Ramon M. 2 Cl Mus.
Jackson, James A. 3 Cl Mus.
Jones, Robert C. 3 Cl Mus.
King, Samuel 3 Cl Mus.
Martin, Nelson C. 2 Cl Mus.
Major, Addington D. 3 Cl Mus.
Mickens, Cyril 1 Cl Mus. [Sick and wounded list]
Moore, James T. 1 Cl Mus. [Sick and wounded list]
Morrison, Henry E. 3 Cl Mus.
Osgood, Arnett L. 3 Cl Mus.
Parris, Gilbert J. 1 Cl Mus.
Pinder, Arthur 3 Cl Mus.
Purnell, George T. 3 Cl Mus.
Ray, Elisha M. 2 Cl Mus.
Reese, William O. 3 Cl Mus.
Revey, James R. 1 Cl Mus.
Scott, Joseph T. 3 Cl Mus.
Smith, Raymond 3 Cl Mus.
Smith, Samuel S. 3 Cl Mus.
Stewart, James E. 3 Cl Mus.
Thompson, Henrico A. 3 Cl Mus.
Williams, James C., Jr. 3 Cl Mus.
Wilson, Andrew C. 3 Cl Mus.
Winder, James B. 3 Cl Mus.
Young, James C. 2 Cl Mus.

On the return home, William H. Smith of Newark, New Jersey (stride pianist Willie "the Lion" Smith), with wife Blanche Smith as next of kin, was still a Corporal in Battery A. By some secondary accounts, he fought in the trenches as a field gunner, distinguished himself, and was promoted to sergeant, but that is not supported by the U.S. Army Transport Service Passenger Lists. William and Blanche, musicians, are in Newark in the US 1920 Census.
Some Rosters for the 15th NY/369th Infantry Band

Passenger List 1917 from San Juan, Puerto Rico, May 5 on the Caracas, to NYC

Here are musicians that James Reese Europe recruited in Puerto Rico for the 15th NY. There are thirteen names, for all of whom the address in the United States is given as the 15th Regiment at 131st and 7th Avenue. Names are given here in the spelling of the passenger list. The thirteen (13) comprise twelve (12) Puerto Rican musicians and Jim Europe. All of these names are in the later Army Transport rosters for the 15th/369th.

Sexito Benitz
Jose Fr. Jimenez
Nicolas Vasquez
Arturo Ayala
Gregorio Filex
Antonio Gonzalez
Pablo Fuentes
Rafael Duchesne
Eleuterio Melendez
Jose Rosa Rivera
Genaro Torres
Solierno Hernandez
Lt. James R. Europe

Four additional musicians from Puerto Rico who become band members are:

Leonardo Cruz
Jesus Hernandez
Rafael Hernandez
Eliges Rijos

NB: Daniel Vernhettes has shared with me a photo of thirteen bandsmen, which identifies the following seven in a caption: “Los músicos portorriqueños que se encuentran en el frente de batalla francés: Eligio Rijos, Rafael Duchesne, Froilán Ramiz, Pablo Fuentes, Antonio González, Rafael y Jesús Hernandez.”

See also:
Roster of 369th musicians of the 15th NY on the Pochahontas 12 December 1917

In all, Mikell plus 52.

In the passenger list, only Mikell plus 24 are identified as musicians of the band. The remainder (see below) had not yet been transferred to Headquarters Company.

Mikell, Eugene F., Band Leader
Sissle, Noble, 1st Sgt.
DeBroite, Frank, Asst. Band Leader
Thompson, Gillard, Color Sgt.
Duchesne, Rafael I., Band Sgt. (PR)  [clarinet]

Felix, Gregorio, Corp. (PR)  [clarinet]
Fuentes, Pablo, Corp. (PR)  [bassoon]
Hill, Hayward B., Corp.
Rosa, Jose, Corp. (PR)  [tuba]

Gonzales, Antonio, Mus. 1Cl. (PR)  [clarinet]
Watkins, John, Mus. 1 Cl.

Hernandez, Rafael, Mus. 2Cl. (PR)  [trombone]
Hernandez, Severino, Mus. 2Cl. (Cuba)
Hubbard, William, Mus. 2Cl.

Booker, Leslie E., Mus. 3Cl.
Brown, James, Mus. 3Cl.
Christmas, Thomas, Mus. 3Cl.
Cruz, Leonardo, Mus. 3Cl. (PR)
Green, Percy, Mus. 3Cl.
Hernandez, Jesus, Mus. 3Cl. (PR)  [clarinet]
Jiminez, Freylan, Mus. 3Cl. (PR)  [baritone]
Rijos, Elijes, Mus. 3Cl. (PR)  [clarinet]
Melendez, Eleuterio, Mus. 3Cl. (PR)  [mellophone]
Torres, Jenaro, Mus. 3Cl. (PR)  [clarinet]
Vasquez, Nicolas, Mus. 3Cl. (PR)  [baritone]
The following 28 are band musicians (as attested in the February 1919 Stockholm passenger list on the return to the USA) who were on the Pochahontas but not in the band roster on the December 1917 passenger list:

Adams, George, Corporal, Co. K
Ayala, Arturo, Private, Co. L
Benites, Sixto, Private, Co. L
Brown, Edward, Private, Co. B
Carter, John, Private, Co. K
Carter, Joshua, Cook, Co. B
Clinton, Stansberry, Private, Co. H
Coleman, Ernest B., Private, Hdqr Company
Ewell, Henry S., 1st Sgt. Co. B
Farrington, Harold A., Corporal, Co. F
Flemming, Herbert, Private, Co. C
Hall, Archie C., Private, Co. I
James, Harold H., Private, Co. E
Johnson, Walter T., Private, Co. B
Jones, Bert, Private, Co. I
Lee, Alfred D., Corporal, Co. A
Lightfoot, William, Private, Co. D
Miller, Charlton B., Private, Co. L
Porter, Jacob, Private, Machine Gun Co.
Richardson, Otto, Private, Co. F
Robinson, Bernard, Bugler, Co. H
Saltus, James, Bugler, Co. C
Smith, David, Private, Co. F
Taylor, William T., Private, Co. C
Thornton, Fred, Corporal, Co. H
Wright, Stephen, Private, Co. I
Wright, Herbert, Private, Co. I
Roster of 369th musicians on the Stockholm 2 February 1919 on the return to the USA

In all, Mikell plus 50.

Mikell, Eugene, Band Leader
DeBroite, Jaco E., Asst. Band Leader [cornet]
Watkins, John H., Sgt. Bugler
Ewell, Henry S., Color Sgt.
Farrington, Harold A., Color Sgt.

Cruz, Leonardo, Band Sgt. (PR)

Duchesne, Rafael, Mus. 1Cl. (PR)
Felix, Gregorio, Mus. 1Cl. (PR) [clarinet]
Gonzales, Antonio, Mus. 1Cl. (PR)
Hill, Hayward B., Mus. 1Cl.
Hernandez, Severino, Mus. 1Cl. (Cuba)

Porter, Jacob, Mus. 2Cl. [cornet]
Brown, James A., Mus. 2Cl.
Brown, Edward, Mus. 2Cl.
Melendez, Eleuterio, Mus. 2Cl. (PR) [mellophone]
Rosa, Jose, Mus. 2Cl. (PR) [tuba]
Terres, Jenero, Mus. 2Cl. (PR) [clarinet]
Vasquez, Nicholas, Mus. 2Cl. (PR) [baritone]
Coleman, Ernest B., Mus. 2Cl.
Adams, George, Mus. 2Cl.
Fuentes, Pablo—Band Corp. [evacuated to hospital] (PR) [bassoon]
Hernandez, Rafael, Band Sgt. (PR) [trombone]
Hubbard, William, Band Sgt.

Ayala, Arturo, Mus. 3Cl. (PR) [clarinet]
Benites, Sixto, Mus. 3Cl. (PR) [tuba]
Booker, Leslie, Mus. 3Cl.
Carter, John, Mus. 3Cl.
Carter, Joshua, Mus. 3Cl.
Christmas, Thomas, Mus. 3Cl.
Clinton, Stansberry, Mus. 3Cl.
Miller, Charlton B., Mus. 3Cl.
Fleming, Herbert M., Mus. 3Cl. (see ship’s hospital list) [trombone]
Froylan, Jimenez, Mus. 3Cl. (PR) [baritone]
Green, Percy G. Mus. 3Cl.
Hall, Archie C., Mus. 3Cl.
Hernandez, Jesus, Mus. 3Cl. (PR) [clarinet]
James, Harold H., Mus. 3Cl.
Johnson, Walter T., Mus. 3Cl.
Jones, Bert, Mus. 3Cl.
Richardson, Otto, Band Corp.
Lee, Alfred D., Mus. 3Cl.
Lightfoot, William, Mus. 3Cl.
Robinson, Bernard, Mus. 3Cl.
Taylor, William T., Mus. 3Cl.
Thornton, Fred, Mus. 3Cl.
Saltus, James, Mus. 3Cl.
Andrews, Ward, Band Sgt. [trombone]
Wright, Stephen, Mus. 3Cl. [percussion]
Smith, David, Band Corp.
Thompson, Gillard, Band Sgt.
Wright, Herbert, Mus. 3Cl. [percussion]

NOTES:

Eligio Rijos is on the roster as a Pvt in the Headquarters Company, but not in the band.

Noble Sissle accepted a commission as a Second Lieutenant and transferred out to be part of the leadership team of the 370th.
ROSTERS OF THE "OLD EIGHTH" (370th)

For this band, there are a 1916 roster (under Berry) and a 1917 roster (under Dulf) in the "U.S. Adjutant General Military Records, 1631-1976."

1916: Band of the Old Eighth under William E. Berry, at least these 32:

Alexander, Charles, Band Sgt.
Armstrong, John, Mus. Third Cl.
Berry, William E., Band Leader
Bias, Clinton, Mus. Second Cl.
Blue, Albert C., Drum Major
Brown, Frank, Mus. Third Cl.
Dorsey, Charles, Band Corp.
Graham, Gerald, Mus. Third Cl.
Knox, Henry, Band Corp.
Lawrence, James, Mus. Second Cl.
Lawson, Loid, Mus. First Cl.
Madison, Arthur, Mus. Third Cl.
Menns, Robert, Mus. Third Cl.
Mosely, George, Mus. Third Cl.
Nixon, James, Mus. Third Cl.
Perry, Oliver, Band Corp.
Pinkney, William, Band Corp.
Randle William, Band Sgt.
Ray, Joseph, Mus. Third Cl.
Smith, Halley, Mus. First Cl.
Smith, James, Mus. Second Cl.
Smith, Walter, Mus. Second Cl.
Spriggs, Richard, Mus. Third Cl.
Swift, Harry, Mus. First Cl.
Swift, Hugh, Band Corp.
Troutman, Robert, Band Corp.
Tucker, James B., Asst. Band Leader
Walker, Charles, Bugler
Walker, Palmer, Mus. Second Cl.
Williams, George, Mus. Third Cl.
Williams, Scott, Band Corp.
Woodfork, James, Band Corp.
1917: band of the Old Eighth under Dulf in the Muster Roll, these 28:

Alexander, Charles, Band Sgt.
Bias, Clinton, Band Corp.
Buckner, James, Mus. Third Cl.
Carroll, Donald, Mus. Third Cl.
Dennie, Frank, Mus. Third Cl.
Dorsey, Charles, Asst. Band Leader
Dulf, George E. Band Leader
Graham, Elwood, Mus. Third Cl.
Graham, Gerald, Mus. Second Cl.
Hilliard, William, Mus. Third Cl.
Hodge, Samuel, Mus. Third Cl.
Instant, Peter, Mus. Third Cl.
Lawrence, James, Mus. Second Cl.
Lawson, Loid, Mus. First Cl.
Lowe, John, Mus. Second Cl.
Miller, Thomas, Mus. Third Cl.
Mills, Lewis, Mus. Third Cl.
Mosely, George, Band Corp.
Perry, Oliver, Band Sgt.
Porter, Lamont, Mus. Third Cl.
Ray, Joseph, Band Corp.
Ross, Henry, Mus. Third Cl.
Sherman, Felix, Band Corp.
Smith, William B., Mus. Third Cl.
Tucker, James B., Mus. First Cl.
Walker, Charles, Bugler
Washington, George W., Mus. Third Cl.
Williams, George, Mus. Second Cl.
1917: A photograph of the “Old Eighth” Band (taken October 11, 1917) has these 33 names in the photo caption (Chicago Broad Axe, February 15, 1919, p. 5):

Alexander, Charles, Band Sgt., tuba
Bias, Clinton, Band Cpl., trombone   [US Census 1920 Chicago laborer]
Brady, Charles H., Mus. Third Cl., cornet [soloist, US Census 1920 Chicago musician]
Buckner, James, Mus. Third Cl., cornet
Carroll, Donald, Mus. Third Cl., alto
Dennie, Frank A., Mus. Scnd Cl., saxophone [soloist; 1919 passport as singer]
Dorsey, Charles, Asst. Band Leader, cornet
Dulf, George E., Band Leader
Ellis, Charles D., private, clarinet
Glover, Swanie, private, piccolo
Govern, James, private, piccolo
Graham, Elwood, Mus. Third Cl., cornet [US Census 1930 Chicago musician]
Graham, Gerald R., Mus. Scnd Cl., alto
Greenlee, Harry, private, cymbals
Gross, Manlius L., Mus. Third Cl., tuba
Harris, Frank, Private, drums
Hilliard, William, Mus. Third Cl., cornet
Jackson, Rudolph, private, clarinet
Lawrence, James H., Mus. Scnd Cl., bass drum
Lawson, Loid W., musician, clarinet [N. Clark Smith's brother-in-law]
Mason, Richard H., private, drums
May, Lloyd, private, alto
Miller, Thomas J., Mus. Third Cl., cornet
Milner, Marshall, private, trombone
Mosley, George, Band Cpl., alto
Perry, Oliver E., Band Sgt., baritone
Porter, Lamont, Mus. Third Cl., clarinet
Ray, Joseph, Band Cpl., cornet
Ross, Henry, Mus. Third Cl., alto
Sherman, Felix, Band Cpl., trombone
Smith, William B., Mus. Third Cl., baritone
Tucker, James B., Mus. First Cl., tuba
Williams, George, Mus. Scnd Cl., snare drum
370th Band Roster on US President Grant, sailing April 7, 1918 from Newport News:

In all, Dulf and 25 names.

Alexander, Charles, Band Sgt.
Bias, Clinton, Band Corporal
Brady, Charles H., Mus. 2Cl.
Buckner, James, Mus. 2Cl.
Carroll, Donald, Mus. 3Cl.
Diemer, Horace L., Mus. 3Cl.
Dorsey, Charles, Asst. Band Leader
Dulf, George E., Band Leader
Ellis, Harry D., Mus. 3Cl
Glover, Sawnie W., Mus. 3Cl.
Graham, Elwood, Mus. 3Cl.
Graham, Gerald R., Mus. 2Cl.
Gross, Manlius L., Mus. 3Cl.
Hutt, William E. Musc. 3Cl.
Jackson, Rudolph, Mus. 3Cl.
Lawrence, James H., Band Corporal
Lawson, Loid W., Mus. 1Cl.
Mason, Richard, Mus. 3Cl.
Mills, Lewis, Mus. 3Cl.
Perry, Oliver, E., Band Sgt.
Porter, Lamont, Mus. 3Cl.
Ray, Joseph, Band Corporal
Ross, Henry, Mus. 3Cl.
Sherman, Felix, Band Corporal
Tucker, James B., Mus. 1Cl.
Walker, Charles E., Sgt. Bugler

[Freeman, Mark P. Color Sgt.]
[Scott, Joseph, Color Sgt.]

ALSO: There are 25 men in a wartime photo taken in the field.

NB: Frank A. Dennie is not in this roster, although he was with the unit in Europe, and he returned with the band in 1919 (see immediately below).
370th Band Roster on La France, sailing February 2, 1919 from Brest for NYC, reflecting a large influx of Musicians Third Class:

In all, Dulf plus 48 names.

Alexander, Charles, Band Sgt.
Bias, Clinton, Band Corporal
Blanchard, Dennis, Mus. 3Cl.
Blue, Albert, 1st Sgt.
Brady, Charles H., Band Sgt.
Buckner, James, Mus. 1Cl.
Carroll, Donald, Mus. 3Cl.
Collins, George, Mus. 3Cl.
Crockett, Harold, Mus. 3Cl.
Dampeep, George, Mus. 2Cl.
Dennie, Frank A., Mus. 1Cl.
Diemer, Horace L., Mus. 2Cl.
Dorsey, Charles E., Asst. Band Leader
Dulf, George E., Band Leader
Ellis, Harry D., Mus. 1Cl
Estell, Don V., Mus. 3Cl. [Estill]
Givens, Scott, Mus. 3Cl.
Glover, Sawnie W., Mus. 3Cl.
Govern, James, Mus. 3Cl.
Graham, Elwood, Mus. 1Cl.
Graham, Gerald R., Band Corporal
Greenlee, Harry, Mus. 3Cl.
Gross, Manlius L., Mus. 2Cl.
Harris, Frank, Mus. 3Cl.
Hiller, Thomas, Mus. 3Cl.
Hilliard, William, Mus. 3Cl.
Humbert, Herbert, Mus. 3Cl.
Hutt, William E., Mus. 2Cl.
Jackson, Rudolph, Mus. 2Cl.
Jenkins, Alvin, Mus. 3Cl.
Lawrence, James H., Band Corporal
Lawson, Loid W., Band Sgt.
Mason, Richard H., Band Corporal
May, Lloyd, Mus. 3Cl.
Mills, Lewis, Mus. 2Cl.
Perry, Oliver, E., Band Sgt.
Porter, Lamont, Mus. 2Cl.
Radcliffe, Boyd, Mus. 3 Cl.
Ray, Joseph, Band Corporal
Robinson, Henry, Mus. 3 Cl.
Robinson, Thomas, Mus. 3Cl.
Ross, Henry, Mus. 2Cl.
Sherman, Felix, Band Corporal
Starks, Albert, Mus. 3Cl.
Traynham, James W., Mus. 3Cl.
Tucker, James B., Mus. 1Cl.
Walker, Charles E., Sgt. Bugler
Williams, George, Mus. 2Cl.
Woodard, William, Mus. 3Cl.

[Freeman, Mark P., Color Sgt.]
[Edmonson, John, Color Sgt.]
Working roster for Europe-bound 807th on the Maui, September 4, 1918:

In all, Vodery plus 55 names

Bailey, John F., Pvt.
Baker, Richard T., Pvt.
Barnes, Harold R., Pvt.
Barnes, Royal H., Pvt.
Blackburn, Harrison, Pvt.
Brown, Julian, Pvt.
Chambers, Dallas E., Pvt.
Cole, Edward, Pvt.
Cooper, James C., Pvt.
Cooper, Opal Dee, Band Sgt.
Davis, Verner, Pvt.
Delis, Amado, Pvt.
DeLoach, Nathan, Pvt.
Edmead, Ernest S., Pvt.
Glover, Clarence L., Cpl.
Granstaff, Earl B., Pvt.
Hairston, Dennis, Pvt.
Harden, William B., Pvt.
Howard, Ralph A., Pvt.
Howe, George, Pvt.
Johnson, Douglas F., Pvt.
Johnson, James E., Pvt.
Johnson, Lacy, Pvt.
Jones, Louia V., Pvt.
Lino, William G., Pvt.
Lofton, Willie, Pvt.
Love, Floyd P., Pvt.
Marshall, Allan, Pvt.
Mayfield, Egbert, Pvt.
Morgan, Frank, Pvt.
McCormick, Louis, Pvt.
McKinney, Henry T. (Pvt., Company M, in 1918)
McMaster, William L., Pvt.
Parker, Bernard H., Pvt.
Pope, Duncan E., Pvt.
Redmond, Ralph S., Pvt.
Richardson, Samuel A., Pvt.
Richardson, Ryars C., Pvt.
Saunders, Samuel L., Pvt.
Scott, John H., Pvt.
Smith, Albert A., Pvt.
Smith, Eddie, Pvt.
John Reeves is on the USS Maui and USS Orizaba with the 807th regiment, but not as a member of the band; nonetheless, it is reported that he was part of the ensemble, as a trombonist, for the minstrel show business.
807 Transport roster on the USS Orizaba, from Brest on June 25, 1919; some individuals travelled separately (e.g., Redmond, Granstaff, DeLoach).

In all, Vodery plus 48 names.

* = singled out for mention in New York Age, January 4, 1919, p. 6 ("Making Music for the Army")

*Vodery, William H., 2nd Lt. Infantry

*Jones, Louia V., ABL
Glover, Clarence L. Band Sgt. Major
Thomas, Julius C., Band Sgt. Major
Hairston, Dennis, Band Sgt. Major

*Thorpe, Charles L., jr., Band Sgt.
*Cooper, Opal Dee, Band Sgt.
*Thurman, Henry L., Band Sgt.
*Lofton, Willie, Band Sgt.

*Smith, Albert, Band Corp.
*Wall, Charles F. Band Corp.
Venable, William A., Band Corp.
*Richardson, Samuel A., Band Corp.
Brown, Julian, Band Corp.
*Blackburn, Harrison, Band Corp.

*Johnson, Douglas F. Mus. 1Cl.
*Parker, Bernard H., Mus. 1Cl
Delis, Amado, Mus. 1Cl.
*Chambers, Dallas E., Mus. 1Cl.
Cooper, James C., Mus. 1Cl

Howe, George, Mus. 2Cl.
Baker, Richard T., jr., Mus. 2Cl.
Lino, William G., Mus. 2 Cl.
Johnson, Lacy, Mus. 2Cl.
Davis, Verner, Mus. 2Cl.
*Wilson, Clarence G., Mus. 2Cl.
Barnes, Harold R., Mus. 2Cl.
Saunders, Samuel L., Mus. 2Cl.
McKinney, Henry T., Mus. 2Cl.
Stewart, Charles E., Mus. 2Cl.

*Williams, Casco, Mus. 3Cl.
*Edmead, Ernest S., Mus. 3Cl.
Love, Floyd P., Mus. 3Cl.
Walkes, Aubrey, Mus. 3Cl.
Smith, Eddie, Mus. 3Cl.
Mayfield, Egbert, Mus. 3Cl.
Morgan, Frank, Mus. 3Cl.
Barnes, Royal H., Mus. 3Cl.
Williams, Walter, Mus. 3Cl.
*Wooding, Samuel, Mus. 3Cl.
*McCormick, Louis, Mus. 3Cl.
Marshall, Allan, Mus. 3Cl.
*Pope, Duncan E., Mus. 3Cl.
*Howard, Ralph A., Mus. 3Cl.
*Whaley, Thomas L., Mus. 3Cl.
*Scott, John H., Mus. 3Cl.
*McMaster, William L., Mus. 3Cl.
Bailey, John F., Mus. 3Cl.
Johnson, James E., jr., Mus. 3Cl.

Notes:

Hunter C. Goode came over on the Maui with the 807th Band and returned on the Orizaba with the 807th Regiment as Corporal, but not with the band.

ON MAUI IN 1918 AND MENTIONED IN NY AGE 1919 ARTICLE BUT NOT ON THE 1919 USS ORIZABA TRANSPORT ROSTER

*DeLoach, Nathan (left for US 3 March 1919)
*Redmond, Ralph, Band Sgt. (left for US on 21 April 1919)
*Granstaff, Earl B., Band Sgt. Major (left for US 8 June 1919)

John Reeves is on the USS Maui and USS Orizaba with the 807th regiment, but not as a member of the band; nonetheless, it is reported that he was part of the ensemble, as a trombonist, for the minstrel show business.
APPENDIX III: THE BANDS ON TOUR IN THE UNITED STATES IN SPRING 1919

Will Marion Cook and his New York Syncopated Orchestra
1919 tour of the East and Midwest, in two round-trip swings
Will Tyers, Asst. Conductor

Billed as not jazz or ragtime (though they did play that), but something more, representing the Negro.

Jan. 30 Lancaster, Pa.
Jan. 31 Baltimore, Md.

Feb. 1 Washington, DC
Feb. 2 Washington, DC
Feb. 3 Hagerstown, Md.
Feb. 4 Johnstown, Pa.
Feb. 5 Altoona, Pa.
Feb. 6 Pittsburgh, Pa.
Feb. 7 Pittsburgh, Pa.
Feb. 8 Cleveland, Oh.
Feb. 9 Akron, Oh.
Feb. 10 Columbus, Oh.
Feb. 12 Chicago, Il.
Feb. 14 Chicago, Il.
Feb. 15 South Bend, Ind.
Feb. 17 Sandusky, Oh.
Feb. 18 Canton, Oh. (matinee and evening)
Feb. 19 Wilberforce University (Springfield)
Feb. 19 Springfield, Oh.
Feb. 20 Youngstown, Oh.
Feb. 21 Marietta, Oh.
Feb. 22 Clarksburg, Oh.
Feb. 23 NYC at the Manhattan Opera House, a benefit for the Urban League
Feb. 26 Williamsport, Pa.
Feb. 27 Allentown, Pa.
Feb. 28 Long Branch, NJ

March 4 Bridgeport, CT
March 5 Bridgeport, CT
March 9 NYC at the 44th Street Theatre

Variety, March 7, 1919, p. 8 reports this appearance as a vaudeville act. Variety, March 14, 1919, p. 13, reported that they had been so successful at the downstairs theatre that it is expected that they will move to the roof garden and stay a week or so, but this possibility is trumped by tour plans. NY Age, March 8, 1919: Speaking of NYSO at 44th Street Theater on Sunday, March 9, "After the performance the company will leave on its second Western tour." And so they do.

March 10 Syracuse
March 11 Syracuse
March 12 Auburn
March 14 Watertown
March 15 Amsterdam, NY
March 16 NYC Winter Garden with others on a huge bill
March 17-23 NYC a week at the Nora Bayes Theatre
March 23 [NY Clipper, March 26, 1919, p. 23 says WMC and NYSO played in the Reisenweber Star Carnival last Sunday the 23rd for men of the 27th Division, at the Park Theater]

March 24 Elmira
March 25 Elmira
March 26 Wilkes Barre, Pa.

Apr. 1 Olean, NY
Apr. 4 Titusville, Pa.
Apr. 5 Oil City, Pa.
Apr. 6 Akron, Oh.
Apr. 7 Canton, Oh.
Apr. 8 Canton, Oh.
Apr. 9 Alliance, Oh.
Apr. 10 Youngstown, Oh.
Apr. 11 Sandusky, Oh.
Apr. 12 Elyria, Oh.
Apr. 13 Columbus, Oh.
Apr. 14 Marion, Oh.
Apr. 15 Lima, Oh.
Apr. 16 Toledo, Oh.
Apr. 17 Toledo, Oh.
Apr. 18 Fort Wayne, Ind.
Apr. 20 Chicago, Il.
Apr. 27 Milwaukee, Wis.
Apr. 28 Chicago, Il. third appearance
Apr. 29 Cincinnati, Oh.
Apr. 30 Pittsburgh, Pa.
Brymn and 70 Black Devils Spring 1919 Tour
---the 350th Field Artillery Band--- in part for Victory Liberty Loans

Soloists on this tour included:
"Jazbo" Giles, comedy conductor and jazz dancer
Josephine Dean, soprano and saxophone
Sergeant Nikols and Corporal Housley, saxophones
Sergeant Kincaid on saxophone (presumably Nelson Kincaid; see Wilkes-Barre Times, April 9, 1919, p. 20; Buffalo Evening News, May 10, 1919, p. 16)

March 19 Philadelphia (US debut; two concerts at Academy of Music)
March 23 Trenton (two concerts at Trent theater)

April 1 Atlantic City, NJ
April 2 Camden, NJ
April 8 Wilkes-Barre, PA
April 9 Harrisburg, PA
April 10 Camp Dix welcome (NY Age, Saturday, April 12, 1919, p. 2)
April 10 Newark, NJ event the same evening
April 11 Scranton, PA
April 12 Wilkes-Barre, PA (return)
April 16 Lebanon, PA
April 17 York, PA
April 21 Cumberland, MD
April 28 Wheeling, WV
April 30 Newark, OH

May 1 East Liverpool, OH
May 4 Mansfield, OH
May 5 Sandusky, OH (matinee)
May 5 Jamestown, NY (evening)
May 6 New Castle, PA
May 7 Oil City, PA
May 8 Jamestown, NY
May 10 Buffalo
May 11 Buffalo
May 12 Buffalo
May 13 Utica, NY
May 14 Amsterdam, NY
May 15 Amsterdam
May 16 Poughkeepsie
May 18 (Sun) NYC at the Casino Theatre (39th and Broadway)
Dulf and the 370th "Black Devils" Band on Tour in Spring 1919

Soloists on the 370th’s spring tour:

Mme. Anita Patti Brown, accompanied by Miss Nathalia Doxy [Natalie Doxey]
Frank A. Dennie, tenor (and band member)
Sergt. Charles E. Brady, cornet virtuoso (sometimes Chas. H. or Chas. A. or Chas. S.)
1st Lieut. Samuel S. (S. S.) Gordon, narrator

The band is reported as an ensemble of 56, 40, and 32, and appears to have been shedding performers over the course of the tour.

-------

March 14, 16 New Orleans (in vaudeville as an extra feature, so hard to track)

March 24 Chicago "Home Concert"
   [possibly a gap before they go out again on the road, although one newspaper says they will immediately board a special train for a tour of more than fifty American cities]

Louisville ("last week," in Youngstown (OH) Vindicator, April 4, 1919, p. 23)

March 29 Columbus
March 30 Toledo
March 31 Detroit

April 2 Cleveland
April 3 Cleveland, morning parade
April 3 Youngstown
April 6 Cleveland, return engagement at Gray's Armory on Sunday
April 8 Cleveland, at Dreamland Hall on Tuesday
April 7 Pittsburgh
April 9 Washington, PA
April 12 Reading, PA
April 13 Philadelphia
April 14 Philadelphia

After Philadelphia they were headed South, bound for Baltimore, Washington, Newport News, hosted by the War Camp Community Service in each city (Dulf letter to Chicago Defender, May 24, 1919, p. 9)

Baltimore (around here?)

April 15 Wilmington, Del. (Wilmington Morning News, April 14, 1919, p. 9)
April 26-May 3
Return to Philadelphia: they were booked by the Philadelphia Victory Loan Committee for eight days beginning April 26 and running through May 3; they were feted at Scott’s hotel on Tuesday, April 29; Mme Anita Patti Brown sang in the organ loft at Wanamaker’s; the Greensboro (NC) Record, May 20, 1919, p. 3 says "Recently this fine organization was taken off its concert tour by the government and sent to Philadelphia where it played during the Victory Loan campaign in that city."

April 28: The band’s manager was in Washington in the week of April 28-May 2 (guesstimate from ref. in NY Age) to arrange bookings, and was headed back through NYC with band soloists to Chicago

May 8 back in Chicago playing at a parade

Then out on the road again:

May 11 Washington, D.C., at the Howard, on Sunday afternoon
May 11 Washington, D.C., Sunday evening, at the War Camp Community Service Club No. 3
May 12/13 Norfolk
May 13/14 Newport News
May 15 or 16 Suffolk, Va. (and parade with ex-Confederates)
May 17 Petersburg (with concert?)
May 19 Richmond, Va. (acc. Richmond newspapers; also here on May 20, acc. a Dulf letter to Chicago Defender, May 24, 1919, p. 9)
May 21 Raleigh (Dulf letter to Chicago Defender, May 24, 1919, p. 9)
May 21 Durham, at the Academy of Music (Durham Morning Herald, May 18, 1919, p. 8; Durham Morning Herald, May 20, 1919, p. 7; while Dulf letter to Chicago Defender, May 24, 1919, p. 9, anticipated this concert on May 22)
May 22 Greensboro, NC at Municipal Theater (evening)
(a concert in Durham at the Colonial Theater, rather than in Greensboro, was an earlier plan for this date, according to a remark in a Dulf letter)

By May 21, Anita Patti Brown was being advertised as the soloist at an upcoming Springfield concert on June 3, and she is described as having "just completed a tour with the Eighth Regiment I. N. G. Band" (Springfield Illinois State Register, May 21, 1919, p. 3).
James Reese Europe and the "Harlem Hellfighters Band" of the 369th Two-Month Spring 1919 Tour

March 16 Manhattan Opera House (matinee and evening)
March 17 Easton, PA
March 18 Harrisburg
March 20 Philadelphia
March 21 Philadelphia
March 22 Brooklyn
March 23 NYC return engagement at Manhattan Opera House
March 24 New Haven
March 26 Hartford
March 28 Boston
March 29 Boston
March 30 Worcester
March 31 Springfield

April 2 Albany
April 3 Albany
April 4 Binghamton
April 5 Auburn
April 6 Syracuse
April 7 Elmira
April 8 Rochester
April 9 Rochester
April 10 Buffalo
April 11 Buffalo
April 12 Cleveland
April 13 Cleveland
April 15 Indianapolis
April 16 Indianapolis
April 17 Evansville, IN April 21 Terre Haute
April 22 Fort Wayne
April 23 Kalamazoo
April 24 Flint
April 25 Battle Creek
April 27 to May 3 Chicago
May 4 Toledo
May 5 Pittsburgh
May 6 Reading
May 7 Harrisburg
May 8 Philadelphia
May 9, 10, 11 Boston

James Reese Europe was murdered in Boston in May 9, 1919. He was stabbed by a bandsman---drummer Herbert Wright---during the intermission of the first day’s evening concert. The next two days of concerts went on as advertised under the baton of Felix Weir.
APPENDIX IV: PROGRAMS OF THE BANDS ON TOUR IN SPRING 1919

Programs from the Spring 1919 US tours of Cook's New York Syncopated Orchestra, and the bands of Brymn and Europe, are printed below, together with a program of the 369th in France. These programs, and what we can glean of Dulf's spring 1919 repertoire, give us our closest view to the material performed by these bands during their overseas service as recently as just three months before.

A few comments:

Each of the bands toured with a single standard program, and newspaper advertisements and reviews confirm that there was little deviation, even if the band played matinee and evening concerts in the same venue, or if the band stayed for two or three days and thus played four to six concerts before moving on.

That having been said, the reviews occasionally mention a non-standard item that was an addition or substitution. For Brymn's band, these include "the Dieulouard Glide," a foxtrot descriptive of an artillery bombardment,163 "The Livery Stable Blues" and selections from Lucia,164 and Rossini's William Tell Overture and selections from the Peer Gynt suite, Dvorak's New World Symphony, and Wagner's Lohengrin.165

For Jim Europe's band, the additional or substitute items include a ragtime version of "Madelon" ("La Madelon" or "Quant Madelon," a French popular song of WWI),166 Creighton Thompson singing "Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep," plus a band version of the Rachmaninoff prelude in C sharp minor, which was "a clever bit of Jazzation,"167 "Ja-Da" by the band and Arthur Payne singing a bass solo,168 and finally, Arthur Payne as basso soloist, the Rachmaninoff, Rossini's Inflammatus from the Stabat Mater, and the Peer Gynt Suite of Grieg.169

Equally to the point in trying to establish what was being played, one reporter commented about the 369th band that "Like most of the good things in life, the wonderful jazz numbers for which this band has an international reputation will be given as extras,"170 and "the boys are generous with encores and while their programs call for nineteen numbers they 163 Scott's Official History, p. 310.

164 Trenton Evening Times, March 22, 1919, p. 16
166 NY Herald, March 17, 1919, p. 9.
167 Buffalo (NY) Express, April 11, 1919, n.p. (illeg.), and for the Rachmaninoff, also Kalamazoo Gazette, April 24, 1919, p. 13.
168 Harrisburg (PA) Patriot, May 8, 1919, p. 4.
169 Kalamazoo Gazette, April 24, 1919, p. 13.
170 Harrisburg (PA) Telegraph, March 17, 1919, p. 10; Harrisburg (PA) Patriot, March 18, 1919, p. 11.
usually play around fifty," and also, they "jazzed classical numbers as well as playing them straight".\textsuperscript{171}

\textsuperscript{171} First quote, Evansville (IN) \textit{Courier and Press}, April 17, 1919, p. 12; second quote, Evansville (IN) \textit{Courier and Press}, April 18, 1919, p. 23.
NEW YORK SYNCOPEATED ORCHESTRA

Part I

1. ORCHESTRA -- "Swing Along" ... Cook
2. ORCHESTRA -- "Sally Trombone" ... (Characteristic)
3. QUARTETTE ... Spirituals
4. ORCHESTRA -- "Call of the Woods" ... Tyers
5. BARITONE SOLO -- "Since You Went Away" ... J. R. Johnson
   George Jones, Jr.
6. ORCHESTRA --
   (a) A Plantation Melody ... Lannen
   (b) Hungarian Rhapsody No. 5 ... Brahms
7. FOLK SONG -- "I Got a Robe" ... Carroll Morgan
8. ORCHESTRA -- "Mid the Pyramids" ... Clarence Jones
9. SAXAPHONE [sic] SOLO -- Maizie Mullins
   (a) "Sing Me to Sleep"
   (b) "Kentucky Home"
10. SOLO, WITH ORCHESTRA -- "Listen to the Lambs" ... Nathaniel Dett

Part II

1. DRUM SOLO -- Buddie Gilmore
2. ORCHESTRA -- "Exhortation" ... Cook
3. CONTRALTO SOLO -- Mme. Constantia Brown Reckling; H. T. Burleigh, Accompanist
4. ORCHESTRA --
   (a) Humoresque ... Dvorak
   (b) "Arabian Nights" ... David
5. TENOR SOLO -- "Mammy" ... Cook
   Milton Abbott
6. TROMBONE SOLO -- "Ah Lib" ... Frank Withers
7. QUARTETTE -- Modern Part Songs
   E. O. Harris, J. C. Payne, E. C. McKinney, C. Rosamond
8. INSTRUMENTAL DUET -- Violin and Cello
   Felix Weir and Leonard Jeter
9. SOPRANO SOLO -- Mme. Florence Cole Talbert
10. ORCHESTRA --
    (a) Characteristic ... Joe Jordan
    (b) "Admiration" ... Tyers
11. ORCHESTRA -- "Rain Song" ... Cook

350th Field Artillery "Black Devils" Band
Program

FIRST EPISODE

1. "America."
2. March. "General Austin" (dedicated to founder of band) . . . Brymn
3. "Sparklets" . . . Brymn
4. "Cocoanut Grove Jazz" . . . Brymn
5. "Alpine Sunset" . . . King
6. Soprano Solo -- Selected
   Miss Josephine Dean
7. "Beal Street Blues" . . . Handy
8. Overture -- "Il Guarany" . . . Gomez
9. Saxophone [sic] Trio
   Miss Dean, Sergeant Nikols, Corporal Housley
10. "Cavalry Charge" . . . Luders
11. "La Rhumba" . . . Brymn
12. "Stars and Stripes Forever" . . . Sousa

SECOND EPISODE

1. Second Regiment March . . . Hall
2. Inflammatus from Stabat Mater . . . Rossini
3. "Sallie Trombone" . . . Lake
4. Saxophone [sic] Solo . . . Sergeant Nikols
5. "Admiration" . . . Tyers
8. Soprano Solo -- Selected . . . Miss Dean
9. Selection from Faust . . . Gounod
10. "Barnyard Blues" . . . LaRocco
11. March -- "Dunlap Commandery" . . . Hall
12. Finale . . . Entire Company
Program of a concert given by the 369th in early 1918 in Aix-les-Bains, France (derived from Dan Vernettes, Commemoration of the Centenary of the arrival of the African-American military bands in France during Work War I: A historical and musical approach [Saint-Etienne-du-Rouvray: Iropa, 1917], p. 18):

First Part

2. Zampa, Overture . . . Herold
3. Indian Summer
4. Arbucklenian Polka . . . Hartman
   Frank De Broite, cornet
5. Song: Baby Boy
6. Camp Meeting Day . . . Mikell and Sissle
   Sergeant Sissle and Company K's Quartet
7. Semiramis, Overture . . . Rossini

Second Part

1. The Old Flag Never Touched the Ground . . . J. R. Johnson
2. Guillaume Tell, Overture . . . Rossini
3. Maggie Day . . . Snow
   Ward Andrews, trombone
4. Our Drummer Boys . . . Hill
   Steven and Herbert Wright, percussion
5. Stars and Stripes Forever, March . . . Sousa
6. Star Spangled Banner
7. La Marseillaise
Variety review by Sime of the March 16 concert, published in the week before the March 23 return engagement at the Manhattan (Variety, n.d. [between March 16-March 23], p. 32).

LIEUT. JAMES REESE EUROPE
And the World Famous
369TH U. S. INFANTRY "HELL FIGHTERS'" BAND
Program

1. French National Defile March -- "Sambre et Meuse" . . . Turlet
2. "Plantation Echoes" . . . Coates
3. Suite - "Dwellers of the Western World" . . . Sousa
   (a) Red Man.
   (b) White Man.
   (c) Black Man.
4. A Musical Melange --
   (a) Violin Solo -- Felix Weir
   (b) Cello Solo -- H. Leonard Jeter.
   (c) "Negro Spirituals" -- Messrs. Weir and Jeter.
5. A Potpourri of Popular Jazz Tunes . . . Remick
7. The Melody Man -- Creighton Thompson, in a Song Barrage.
   (a) "Rock a Bye Your Baby" . . . Schwartz
   (b) "I'll Say She Does" . . . Jolson
8. Waltz -- "Djer Kiss" . . . Ager
   Creighton Thompson, L. Lloyd Gibbs, Earl Bumpforn, Pete Zabriskie, Cloyd Earl, Whitney Viney, Thomas Lee and Arthur Payne.
10. Characteristic -- "Panama" . . . Tyers
11. A Biff Bang Bombardment by the "Percussion Twins"
    Steve and Herbert Wright, with Europe's Band

Intermission

12. "Los Banterilles" . . . Sabata
13. Al Jones in a Pianologue with Original Songs.
14. Caprice -- "Trocha" . . . Tyers
    Antonino Gonzales, Ves Williams, Percy Green, Arturo Ayala,
    Clarence Jones, Joshua Carter and Severino Hernandez [NB: seven men]
17. Lieut. Jim Europe and Lieut. Noble Sissle (former Drum Major of Band) in Original Song Swabbles.
18. Jazz -- "That Moaning Trombone" . . . Bethel
19. Selected Songs by the Singing Serenaders and Europe's Band.
Dulf and the "Black Devils" Band of the Old Eighth (370th Infantry):

No complete programs have been found.

In Cleveland, program numbers included an aria from "La Traviata" and an encore, "If you never had a beau," by Anita Patti Brown. In Virginia, towards the end of the tour, they performed Luders' descriptive "Cavalry Charge" and popular items such as "Havanola," "Livery Stable Blues," "Ja Da," and an encore of "Memphis Blues" (Chicago Defender, May 24, 1919, p. 1).

In Youngstown, Ohio, "If any criticism is to be made it would be that the program did not contain any negro melodies or music by American negro composers. It is part of the organization’s mission to show what colored people can do, and distinctly negro music ought to be one of its specialties" (Youngstown (OH) Vindicator, April 4, 1919, p. 23).

However, in Cleveland, "Jazz reigned supreme . . . . Selections from grand opera were appreciated by the audience, which nearly filled the armory, but when the boys played the popular jazz music the audience became so excited that, had it not been Sunday, there might have been dancing. Many encores were demanded. They were always answered with more jazz" (Plain Dealer, April 7, 1919, p. 6; Cleveland Gazette, April 12, 1919, p. 3).