Originally written for solo soprano with choir and organ, Werner Jaegerhuber completed this work in 1953, and his close friend and artistic collaborator, Louis Maximilien, commissioned it for the sesquicentennial of Haiti’s independence on January 1, 1954. However, since there are no published scores or even a reliable manuscript of this piece, what has been kept in the archives of the Société de recherche et de diffusion de la musique Haïtienne in Montreal, Canada are two dissimilar scores by unknown sources. One is the choral and organ version, which was made by a professional copyist in the 1950’s (judging by the type of paper they used) and the other is just vocal, which is most likely a 1970’s version. John Jost, a well-known arranger and orchestrator of Haitian folk music, attempted to transcribe this mass for a string orchestra with choir as he thought that Jaegerhuber would have wished to have this type of ensemble at his disposition. The only problem is that Jost never wrote a score for that transcription. This critical performance edition is based upon his idea of the string orchestra, using the earlier manuscript alongside the cultural traditions of Haitian folk songs and rhythms, and Voodoo ceremonies’ customs to create a clean version for the encouragement, promotion and assistance of future performances of this piece.
The introduction provides a synopsis of Jaegerhuber’s biography, style, and influences for an enlightened presentation. The description and editorial procedure include a background of the Mass and selected analyses of its organization. The conclusion is the newly edited full score. The appendixes comprise the facsimile of the unknown manuscript, the newly edited orchestral parts, and the full orchestral score from the original version of the Kyrie and Benedictus.
AUTHOR’S ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I would like to thank God for allowing me to reach this point in my life. I am also deeply grateful to Rudy Perrault and his family, Mary and Arthur Aufderheide, Janet Anthony, Dr. John Jost, Deborah Greitzer, Friends of Chester Park Church, James Gittemeier, and Steven Huang for their support in achieving this milestone in my career.

Special thanks to my advisor, Dr. Tyler G. White for sharing his skill in editing of the work from a composer’s standpoint, as well as his assistance in the writing process.

I would also like to thank the doctoral committee members, Dr. Carolyn Barber, Professor Clark Potter, and Dr. Kwame Dawes for their support and advice throughout the duration of this project.

Thanks to Daniel Baldwin for his help with the technological challenges of this edition.

Immense gratitude to Dr. Robert Grenier for allowing me to use his edition for this project, and Jean Jeoboham Pierre for his collaboration in performing the Mass.

Thanks to the faculty and staff of the Glenn Korff School of Music for their help throughout these three years.

Finally, thanks to my parents Marie-Celimable Estinfils, and the late Canier Nicolas, my beautiful wife Kimberly Nicolas and my handsome son Jayden Nicolas for all the love, support, help and encouragement they provide me with every day.

INTRODUCTION

I grew up in Port-au-Prince, Haiti where the styles of music are compa, voodoo, racine, zouk and troubadour. I did not know much about classical music until I attended the Ecole de Musique Sainte Trinité (Holy Trinity Music School), the most well-established music school in the country, where I was given the privilege to begin my musical training. Subsequently, when I became a conductor, I knew that one of my duties would be to promote Haitian classical music.

I never thought of doing a project like this, but when my former teacher Rudy Perrault gave me the opportunity to do a Finale version of this Mass in 2009 as my senior project, I jumped right on it. I noticed there was room for improvement in making this piece more accessible, more readable and more organized. Thus came the idea of making a new performance edition based on John Jost’s idea of the string orchestra. Using the earlier manuscript with the 1970’s choral score, my own knowledge of the cultural rituals of Haitian folk songs and rhythms, and the customs of Voodoo ceremonies, I produced a clean edition for the inspiration, promotion and assistance of future performances of this unusual and important work.

Werner Anton Jaegerhuber (1900-1953) was a German-Haitian composer and a prominent ethnographer. He studied composition at the Vogt’sches Konservatorium in Hamburg, Germany.¹ He visited Haiti briefly in 1921, during the American occupation, and became interested in Haitian folk music. After the occupation, he returned to Haiti permanently in 1937 and worked as a music teacher, composer and amateur painter.²

Jaegerhuber was interested in producing a Haitian national musical style based on the country’s folk music, which consists predominantly of Voodoo songs. He produced several transcriptions of Haitian folksongs for use in his own works such as Le vodou Haïtien, a study of Voodoo rituals. He also produced a study, “Chants vodouesques,” which was published subsequently in the Bulletin du Bureau nationale d’ethnologie d’Haïti.³

His output comprises orchestral and chamber works, as well as choral and solo works, which set texts in German, French, English and Haitian Creole. His musical style is wide-ranging, and his most popular works are those based on Haitian folk themes such as Messe Folklorique Haïtienne, which contains a Latin text set to music inspired by Haitian voodoo rituals.

³ Ibid.
Jaegerhuber began this composition in 1947, but did not complete it until 1953. It was premiered (date uncertain) in a theatre in the army barracks behind the National Palace in Port-au-Prince. Its original title was Messe sur les airs vodouesques, meaning Mass based on voodoo songs. It was rejected by Mgr. Paul Sansone Jean-Marie Robert, Bishop of Gonaives (the city of Haiti’s independence) because of its unusual and innovative combination of voodoo songs in the Roman liturgy. Mgr. Paul Robert was an advocate of the 1940’s movement of “anti-superstition” between the Catholic Church and Voodoo. Many Catholic Church leaders in Haiti worked hard to eradicate the idea that Voodoo influenced the celebration of mass. Therefore, the piece was cancelled for the historic occasion. As a diversionary tactic, Louis Maximilien suggested this title Messe Folklorique Haitienne in order to draw the attention of a more extended audience. For the purpose of this project, the second title will be used.

For Jaegerhuber, exposing the vodouesque panache was a determination to diffuse the notion of the obscure and heinous nature of Voodoo. The unfamiliar awareness of Voodoo as malicious confronted him. Folks were terrified to welcome Voodoo’s themes and thus its art. Jaegerhuber worked hard at displaying not only the Voodoo elements of Haitian art, but also the results that West and Central Africa and Gregorian chants of the early church had on Haitian music. His accomplishments were met with confrontation from both the Haitian élite who were embarrassed of their Voodoo culture and other classical musicians who considered these airs as too primitive for arrangements in the European style.⁸

Haitians have a saying, “Depi tanbou frape tout moun leve danse” (when drums hit everyone get up to dance). Rhythm is the most essential and appealing aspect of Voodoo music. Since this Mass is based on Voodoo songs, it is imperative to include at least one drum in the performance. Customarily, in a Voodoo ceremony mutual energy is a necessary condition for summoning the spirits, and drummers use a driving beat to generate it.⁹ Including drums in the mass will clarify the rhythms and encourage a shared energy among the musicians in the ensemble.

⁸ Grenier, 47.
Messe Folklorique Haïtienne is a Mass in six movements that contains melodies that are derived from both the Gregorian chant and Voodoo traditions. The use of the soprano soloist is definitely not a coincidence. Jaegerhuber knew that was a representative of the chorus master in the voodoo ceremony, which always features a female leader.

Kyrie

This movement replicated the ancient style of Gregorian chant, and contains the standard configuration of a Kyrie in a three-part form. The text is “Kyrie eleison, Christe eleison, Kyrie eleison,” and the orchestral material presents the opening melodic figure and then the choir joins restating that same passage. All four parts are in octaves for the three “Kyrie eleison” statements. This movement is in D Aeolian, and the use of modal melody is borrowed from both Medieval and Voodoo melodic practices.\(^{10}\)

This typical ternary form exploits both Catholic and Voodoo religious traditions. As the A section reflects the Gregorian influence, the B section (mm.12-34) diverts to the Voodoo tradition. When the “Christe eleison” passage begins, both the meter and tempo change. In the original version, this section is in a 5/8 meter, which makes it unnecessarily complex. This calls into question the composer’s knowledge of Haitian rhythms, which are not characteristically in asymmetrical meter. John Jost, in an interview with Ferère Laguerre (a student of Jaegerhuber and a reputable master drummer) stated that the 5/8 meter does not really fit in this context. In other words, the

\(^{10}\) Ibid.
5/8 meter lacks the appropriate rhythmic character for the Haitian Voodoo practice that Jaegerhuber was trying to portray. By changing the middle section to a 2/4 meter, this edition provides a more suitable solution of Jaegerhuber’s intention (See figures 1A, 1B).

When the final “Kyrie” section returns, it is in the opening tempo, and it is a direct quotation of the first statement creating a usual and symmetrical closing.

The fact that this movement is structured around the Gregorian chant makes it lack any tertian harmony. Jaegerhuber not only chose to follow the melodic structure of the early church, but also the lack of harmonic structure. Although the movement does not contain specific organum (a form of polyphony based on an existing plainsong), it does center itself around monophonic passages with occasional open fifths.¹¹

In this movement alone, Jaegerhuber successfully demonstrates the marriage of Voodoo and Catholicism by combining the Gregorian chant style with its counterpart.

Gloria

This movement features the soprano soloist, and it is also in a three-part form in the key of G minor. It begins with the soloist and orchestra without an antiphon, which is unusual for a Mass. The choir enters on the “Laudamus te” phrase of the text, repeating the same melodic material as the soloist. It is a perfect example of a Voodoo ceremony because of the way that Jaegerhuber uses the soloist as a representative of the chorus master, which always spotlights a female leader.

The second thematic section (starting at measure 36) is in A minor, an uncharacteristic relationship between the first and last sections. Although this movement does not contain any distinct Voodoo themes, its rhythmic nature is certainly Voodoo-like.
Its 6/8-meter is based upon a “double Nago,” which is considered the rhythm of power.

![Musical notation]

Credo

In this movement, Jaegerhuber begins with “Le Prêtre,” meaning the officiating priest, which is performed by a male tenor. It resembles an antiphon of the early church, and is a cappella during the antiphon passage. The accompaniment is simple but far more dramatic than the previous two movements.

From measures 81–94, Jaegerhuber adapts a traditional Voodoo song called “C’est Jodi moin” by simply inverting the theme and hardly changing the rhythm.$^{13}$ Figures 3A and 3B show the relationship between the two.

Sanctus

This movement is based on the Voodoo song “Dambalâ oh.”

The text of the Sanctus and of “Dambalâ oh” share the idea of awe while in the presence of the Divine.15

15 Ibid 146.
The opening of the Sanctus bears a resemblance to this melody and must have been carefully selected to pair them together, as both tunes traditionally repeat the text for more emphasis.\(^{16}\)

!Sheet Music

Benedictus

As in the Kyrie, Jaegerhuber uses a 5/8 meter in this movement that creates problems. The fact that there are instances of 2+3 against 3+2 simultaneously makes this movement idiomatically complex. Because Voodoo rhythms are characteristically simple, although when listening to them for the first time, one might think that they are extremely complicated. However, when you dig deeper into their groove, they create ease and simply flow smoothly. This movement is inspired by the Voodoo song “Vling sou Vling.”

\(^{16}\) Lindsey, 71.

The closing movement shows a commitment to the significance of the text. The Agnus Dei text says “Lamb of God, who takes away the sins of the world, have mercy on us.” “Lamb of God, who takes away the sins of the world, grant us peace,” and just as in the Gloria, the choir only contributes to the text “have mercy on us” and “grant us peace.” The soloist sings “Lamb of God, who takes away the sins of the world” as the call, and then the choir responds with their short phrases as a congregation.

This movement has two Voodoo tunes, “Erzulie é” and “Laza oh.” The uncanny choice of using these two melodies in this movement is ingenious. “Erzuli é” is a calling for the lwa Erzulie, the name given to a group of goddesses. Although the translation is uncertain, it means something like “Erzulie, please bring us food” and “Laza oh” means “Lazarus, be near us.” All three texts are a plea for healing.\textsuperscript{17}
