Keeping a Secret from Yourself? Confidentiality When the Same Neutral Serves Both as Mediator and as Arbitrator in the Same Case

Kristen M. Blankley
University of Nebraska College of Law, kblankley2@unl.edu

Follow this and additional works at: http://digitalcommons.unl.edu/lawfacpub

Part of the Legal Studies Commons

http://digitalcommons.unl.edu/lawfacpub/122

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by the Law, College of at DigitalCommons@University of Nebraska - Lincoln. It has been accepted for inclusion in College of Law, Faculty Publications by an authorized administrator of DigitalCommons@University of Nebraska - Lincoln.
KEEPING A SECRET FROM YOURSELF? CONFIDENTIALITY WHEN THE SAME NEUTRAL SERVES BOTH AS MEDIATOR AND AS ARBITRATOR IN THE SAME CASE

Kristen M. Blankley*

I. Confidentiality in Same-Neutral Mediation-Arbitration: What No One Has Told Neutrals ...........................................319
II. Combining Mediation and Arbitration into a Hybrid Process ...................................................................................323
III. Why the Benefits of Same-Neutral Med-Arb Outweigh the Criticisms .................................................................325
   A. Same-Neutral Med-Arb as an Efficient, Flexible, and Final Process .................................................................326
   B. Confidentiality—and Other—Concerns Associated with Same-Neutral Med-Arb ...........................................332
   C. For Willing Participants, Same-Neutral Med-Arb Provides Benefits Not Available in Other Procedures ....337
IV. Mediation Confidentiality Statutes Make No Exceptions for the Med-Arb Procedure ....................................................338
   A. Jurisdictions Adopting the Uniform Mediation Act Explicitly Treat Mediation Communications as Privileged in Subsequent Arbitrations ........................................339
   B. Broad Confidentiality Statutes in non-UMA Jurisdictions Likewise Have No Exemption for Arbitration Procedures .....................................................................................342
V. Courts Are Hesitant to Uphold Arbitration Agreements in Med-Arb When the Parties Have Not Expressly Consented to the Use of Mediation Communications in the

*Kristen Blankley is an Assistant Professor at the University of Nebraska College of Law. Thanks to Alan Frank, Craig Lawson, Sarah Cole, Ellen Deason, Michael Moffitt, Maureen Westbrook, Josh Stulberg, Chris Fairman, Amy Cohen, Paul Kirgis, Hiro Aragaki, and Chris Haas for their help on earlier versions of this article. Thanks to Desireé Clark for research assistance and valuable insight. Special thanks to my husband, Mike.
Arbitration.................................................................346
A.  Bowden v. Weickert—Vacating an Award in Med-Arb
   Explicitly Based on Mediation Communications...........346
B.  Town of Clinton v. Geological Services Corp.—Ruling That the Use of Med-Arb Does Not Constitute an Implicit Waiver of Mediation Confidentiality ............350
C.  In re Cartwright—Providing Extraordinary Relief to Parties Urged to Use Med-Arb When One Party Does
   Not Consent to the Procedure........................................353
D.  Township of Aberdeen v. Patrolmen’s Benevolent Association, Local 163—Disapproving of Mediator
    Reliance on Arbitration Awards..................................356
E.  These Cases Demonstrate How Mediation
    Confidentiality Applies to Med-Arb Procedures ..........358
VI.  In Light of Comprehensive Confidentiality Laws, Parties’ Informed Consent to Participate in Med-Arb Must Be Reflected in Writing......................................................361
VII. Conclusion .............................................................366

As the alternative dispute resolution field has grown, parties have designed their own processes from established processes in an attempt to best serve their process needs. One such hybrid process is mediation-arbitration, called “med-arb” for short. Med-arb involves a single neutral who first serves as a mediator, and if the parties reach an impasse in mediation, the neutral then serves as an arbitrator to resolve the dispute.
Although the literature has given some attention to the benefits and drawbacks of med-arb, this Article examines the process in light of broad mediation confidentiality and privilege statutes. Because these laws have no exceptions for med-arb, parties who seek to utilize this process must execute careful waivers to avoid the possibility that any resulting arbitration award will later be vacated by the courts.
I. CONFIDENTIALITY IN SAME-NEUTRAL MEDIATION-ARBITRATION: WHAT NO ONE HAS TOLD NEUTRALS

The combination of mediation and arbitration into a single process, known as “med-arb,” has rightfully gained some popularity in recent years. Med-arb is a process that attempts to marry two fundamental, but somewhat opposing, goals of alternative dispute resolution (ADR). Those two goals are finality and collaboration, and these goals are generally not served in the same process. As described in more detail below, med-arb...
involves a mediation followed immediately by an arbitration if the mediation is unsuccessful. Depending on how the parties structure their process, the same neutral can serve both functions, or different neutrals can serve as the mediator and arbitrator. This Article focuses on the former arrangement, which is known as “same-neutral med-arb.”

Same-neutral med-arb can be valuable in achieving goals such as speed, efficiency, and finality. However, the procedure is not without some drawbacks. One of the biggest drawbacks of med-arb is the potential that the neutral might impermissibly decide the arbitral case based on confidential or privileged information learned during mediation. Improper use of mediation communications is important for at least two reasons. First, parties to mediation expect their proceedings to be confidential, particularly during a private meeting with the mediator, sometimes called a caucus session. Second, and perhaps even more importantly, the law may provisions deal with confidentiality generally, and they do not regulate whether statements made in mediation are confidential, even during the arbitration, or if the mediation confidentiality has been waived in that respect. See id. § 518.1751(4a). To date, no opinion expressly deals with confidentiality concerns between these two processes, even if the statute is clear in making all of the statements within the med-arb procedure confidential and inadmissible in any subsequent dealing or proceeding. See id. Documents provided to the court within the “normal course of the expeditor’s duties,” however, are not confidential. Lee v. Herbert, No. A03-1023, 2004 WL 948385, at *5 (Minn. Ct. App. May 4, 2004) (unpublished table case). These reports, however, must not contain “confidential positions of the parties” but only “affirm the existence and terms of the parties’ negotiated agreement.” Id. Interestingly, in Lee, the court found the admission of the expeditor’s notes, specifically confidential information under the statute, was admissible to show “whether an agreement was reached.” Id.

9 See Phillips, Same-Neutral Med-Arb, supra note 7, at 27.

10 See Bartel, supra note 2, at 679 (“[T]he neutral may become privy to confidential information in the mediation stage, thereby making an unbiased decision in the arbitration stage difficult.”); see also Phillips, Same-Neutral Med-Arb, supra note 7, at 27.

11 Dobbins, supra note 2, at 176 (“Candid, confidential communication is a pillar of mediation.”).

12 Phillips, Same-Neutral Med-Arb, supra note 7, at 27 (noting that ethical issues may arise in med-arb, especially when “the arbitrator’s decision could be influenced by confidential information learned during private caucuses”).

Med-arb is somewhat similar to judicial settlement conferences in which the same judge hearing the case conducts the settlement conference. In both situations, the neutral acts as a go-between to help the parties reach a consensual settlement, and then later acts as a decision-maker in the event that the parties cannot reach agreement. This Article does not discuss the judicial settlement conference, but it notes that most judges have no qualms about conducting a settlement conference with the parties, even though the judge may later act as the ultimate arbiter of the case. See Beijing Arbitration Comm’n & Straus Inst. for Dispute Resolution, East Meets West: An International Dialog on Mediation and Med-Arb in the United States and China, 9 PEPP. DISP. RESOL. L.J. 379, 402 (2009) (“It is interesting because [judicial settlement conferencing] has many of the same concerns that we have as far as med-arb. What we found in the survey is that eighty percent of judges thought this was appropriate, and that in fact they were not concerned about it as long as the parties consented.”).

Under some circumstances, neutrals in med-arb may prohibit caucusing during the mediation phase of the process. The Rules of the Colorado Mediators and Arbitrators have specific med-arb rules that prohibit any ex parte communication with the neutral during the process, including require that the mediation communications remain confidential, even during the arbitration session, if the parties do not execute waivers of the mediation confidentiality. Awards rendered based on confidential mediation communications—as opposed to arbitration evidence—may be subject to vacatur under the Federal Arbitration Act, or a similar state statute.

Although neutrals in med-arb would consider obtaining the proper waivers to be a “best practice,” the law in many jurisdictions absolutely requires a proper waiver, as noted in more detail below.

This Article will briefly discuss how med-arb is conducted, the history of med-arb, as well as the benefits and drawbacks to the procedure, focusing primarily on confidentiality concerns. Most scholarship to date focuses solely on these policy issues. This Article goes further and discusses how the Uniform Mediation Act (UMA) and similar state statutes provide for the absolute confidentiality of mediation communications, even in the arbitration portion of a med-arb procedure. This Article then discusses how court decisions to date echo these concerns. Finally, this Article gives recommendations for med-arb neutrals and parties for drafting mediation confidentiality waivers.

See UNIF. MEDIATION ACT § 5, 7A U.L.A. 122 (Supp. 2006). Understanding the differences between confidentiality and privilege is crucial. A confidential communication cannot be repeated anywhere, but upon a requisite showing of burden, a court may reluctantly admit confidential information into evidence. Privileged communications, on the other hand, are inadmissible in court—but not necessarily confidential. In other words, while a privileged communication cannot be admitted in a proceeding, repeating the statements outside of a proceeding (to a family member, a neighbor, a co-worker, etc.) is not necessarily prohibited. Of course, parties can always contract for confidentiality when a privilege would otherwise apply to protect the communications inside and outside of proceedings.

See infra Part IV.

For the purposes of this article, med-arb is assumed to be a process involving the same neutral and a process in which the parties agree at the onset to use mediation, potentially followed by arbitration. As will be discussed in more detail infra, another form of med-arb occurs when the parties agree to mediation and then request the mediator to decide the case when the negotiations fail. Gerald F. Phillips, It’s More Than Just ‘Med-Arb’: The Case for ‘Transitional Arbitration,’ 23 ALTERNATIVES TO HIGH COST LITIG. 151, 152–53 (2005) [hereinafter Phillips, Trans-Arb]. Yet a third form of med-arb may occur when a person hired as an arbitrator suggests the parties engage in med-arb instead, and the parties agree to such a procedure. See id. at 153. Differing
II. COMBINING MEDIATION AND ARBITRATION INTO A HYBRID PROCESS\textsuperscript{17}

As noted above, same-neutral med-arb is a process in which the parties agree to first mediate their case, and if the mediation is unsuccessful, the parties then agree to arbitrate the case with the same neutral acting as the arbitrator.\textsuperscript{18} This process is voluntary; the parties must agree to engage in med-arb.\textsuperscript{19} The process first arose in the public sector, in order to reach a collective bargaining agreement, particularly in important industries in which striking is not a viable option for the public good.\textsuperscript{20} Parties chose this method because it combined the flexibility of mediation with the guarantee of a final and binding decision in arbitration in these cases involving important, public employees.\textsuperscript{21}

For similar reasons, med-arb is sometimes employed in private-sector collective bargaining arenas. See, e.g., Specialized Distribution Mgmt., Inc. v. Bd. of Teamsters, Local #70, No. C-95-2058 CW, 1995 WL 688662, at *1 (N.D. Cal. Nov. 13, 1995) (“Unable to reach agreement, the parties engaged in a hybrid mediation/arbitration procedure, in which the arbitrator was to assist the parties in mediating the open issues, but, if the mediation was unsuccessful, was to conduct a ‘baseball-style arbitration’ and select one party’s final offer without modification as the CBA. Throughout this proceeding, Local 70 argued for retaining the area practice for permitting drivers to honor picket lines. It described the local procedure to Arbitrator Dorsey and submitted copies of contracts in the industry containing picket line language.”).

\textsuperscript{21} Bartel, supra note 2, at 672 (“Further, the mediator’s effectiveness is increased when the parties are aware that the next step is a binding decision that neither party may like.”).
III. WHY THE BENEFITS OF SAME-NEUTRAL MED-ARB OUTWEIGHT THE CRITICISMS

Because of the definition of med-arb and the manner in which the proceedings progress, the process offers several advantages and disadvantages. Although these will be explored more carefully below, a brief preview of the issues is helpful. Generally, the advantages of med-arb include increased speed and efficiency of the process as compared to arbitration or litigation. Additionally, the process is more flexible than either mediation or arbitration alone, and the process is structured in such a way as to ensure finality, an aspect missing if the parties simply attempted to mediate. The primary drawback of med-arb discussed in this Article is the potential that confidential information disclosed in the mediation (particularly in caucus) is later used by the neutral in fashioning the arbitration award. In addition, given the neutral’s changing roles in the process, parties have a disincentive to participate fully in the mediation process and disclosing and discussing their interests because they fear that this information will later be used against them. However, despite these 22 Gerald F. Phillips, perhaps the leading scholar and practitioner on med-arb, suggests the name “med-arb” is both “confusing and an oxymoron.” Phillips, Trans-Arb, supra note 16, at 151. A new name is also being sought because “med-arb” has become synonymous with breaches of mediation confidentiality. Id. Instead, Phillips opted to use the term “same neutral med-arb” to describe the process in which a single neutral undertakes to act as both a mediator and an arbitrator in a single case. Id. Additionally, the term “transitional arbitration” or “trans-arb” has been suggested to show the transition of a case between mediation and arbitration. Id.

24 See id. at 26; see Bartel, supra note 2, at 679. Given the different focuses of mediation and arbitration, the neutrals engaged in the med-arb proceeding may focus their neutral style on different portions of the process. Elayne E. Greenberg, ADR Meets Bankruptcy: Cross-Purposes or Cross-Pollination? Conclusion: We Can Work It Out: Entertaining a Dispute Resolution System Design for Bankruptcy Court, 17 AM. BANKR. INST. L. REV. 545, 547 (2009) (“[S]ome judges and trustees opt to focus on their mediative roles, spending time listening to all those involved, culling out interests and encouraging contesting parties to devise their own resolutions. Other judges and neutrals emphasize their decision-making role, believing that their decision-making role will ensure the efficient disposition of cases.” (footnotes omitted)); see also Thomas J. Stipanowich, The Arbitration Penumbra: Arbitration Law and the Rapidly Changing Landscape of Dispute Resolution, 8 NEV. L.J. 427, 428 (2007) (“Moreover, as lawyers garner experience with these processes and the ranks of self-described professional neutrals asserting multi-faceted expertise swell, some are experimenting with ‘switching hats’ to play different neutral roles in connection with a dispute.”).

25 See discussion infra Part III.B.

26 See Phillips, Same-Neutral Med-Arb, supra note 7, at 27. An article discussing the virtues drawbacks, the benefits of med-arb are significant, and parties who willingly choose to enter the process should be able to do so freely, knowing it may be the best possible manner in which their dispute can be resolved.27

A. Same-Neutral Med-Arb as an Efficient, Flexible, and Final Process

The most obvious benefits of same-neutral med-arb compared to different-neutral med-arb, mediation, or arbitration include the process’s ability to resolve disputes quickly and efficiently.28 Because the parties use the same neutral for both mediation and arbitration, if arbitration proves necessary, the parties will presumably save time because they will only have to search for one neutral, rather than two.29 Additionally, if the process requires arbitration, the neutral is presumably already educated as to the facts and circumstances involved in the case.30 Although some of ADR in the realm of family law discusses the potential place for med-arb among parenting coordinators. Elayne E. Greenberg, Fine Tuning the Branding of Parenting Coordination: “. . . You May Get What You Need,” 48 FAM. CT. REV. 206, 208 (2010). Greenberg succinctly poses some of the most important questions that participants in any med-arb situation may face:

How is the mediation opportunity influenced if the parties know that the neutral might ultimately be the decision maker? How does the mediation ideology the neutral relies on impact the entire process? How long do you stay in the mediation step before switching to the arbitration mode? What are the triggering events to signal you to switch from one mode to the other?

Id. (emphasis omitted); see also Christine A. Coates, A Brief Overview of Parenting Coordination, COLO. LAW., July 2009, at 61, 62 (describing the differences between a neutral engaged in med-arb and a neutral who is a parenting coordinator).

27 Stipanowich, supra note 24, at 432 (“Arbitration law is about enforcing consensual arrangements for private dispute resolution, with a central tenet being effectuation of the intent of the parties as expressed in their agreement. Within the ambit of the FAA and the more prescriptive framework of some state arbitration statutes, therefore, parties are afforded considerable flexibility to structure processes as they see fit.” (footnote omitted)).

29 Id. (“There is no need for the parties to review the qualifications of potential arbitrators if no agreement is reached in mediation because the same neutral will arbitrate the dispute. Selecting a new arbitrator is often time-consuming. Considerable time is saved by having the mediator become the arbitrator.”). One commentator suggests that med-arb might work best in situations in which the parties “have a working relationship with the third-party neutral.” Bartel, supra note 2, at 675.

30 Phillips, Same-Neutral Med-Arb, supra note 7, at 28 (“Very little time is necessary at the arbitrators will need to, or would just like to, collect further testimonial or documentary evidence, no hearing may be necessary if the neutral learned sufficient information in the mediation upon which to render an award.\textsuperscript{31} Although the arbitrator will need time to render an award, the parties could save considerable time by shortening or eliminating the arbitration hearing.\textsuperscript{32}

Med-arb may also be more cost-effective than using different-neutral med-arb, and it should be less expensive than litigating the dispute in court.\textsuperscript{33} By contracting with one neutral to perform two services, the parties will most likely pay less than if they would have to contract for a separate mediator and arbitrator.\textsuperscript{34} If the case settles during mediation, the cost savings may be dramatic because most of the expenses of med-arb are associated with the arbitration hearing, which could require taking testimony from witnesses and presenting other evidence.\textsuperscript{35} Additionally, the expenses for the neutral would increase if the mediator-turned-arbitrator is required to write an arbitration award.\textsuperscript{36} To create a financial disincentive for the mediator to arbitrate, the parties could arrange to pay the neutral a premium if the case settles in mediation. Other financial arrangements could provide a discounted rate for the neutral if the neutral must render both mediation and arbitration services. This type of arrangement could adequately protect both the parties and the neutral depending on how the case proceeds.

More so than under either mediation or arbitration, med-arb can be an extraordinarily flexible process, if the parties allow for such flexibility.\textsuperscript{37} Although med-arb is commonly thought of as a mediation followed by an arbitration, nothing prevents the parties from taking breaks from a mediation to negotiate a settlement or even from taking a break from the \footnotesize{these two situations, however, is the immediacy of the adjudicatory procedure. See Phillips, Same-Neutral Med-Arb, supra note 7, at 26. In med-arb, the costs associated with arbitration will be borne immediately (or nearly immediately) after the mediation concludes in impasse.

Arbitrators are often paid by the hour, and the more work that the arbitrator is asked to do, the more money the neutral’s services are going to cost. Id.

arbitration to head back to mediation.\textsuperscript{38} If the parties agree such flexibility may be helpful in resolving their dispute, they could contract for a procedure such as this, or they could simply agree during the process to employ one dispute-resolution mechanism over another as the situation may dictate.\textsuperscript{39}

\textsuperscript{38}See Philips, \textit{Trans-Arb, supra} note 16, at 153. Phillips describes a situation in which he did the latter. \textit{See id.} After an unsuccessful mediation and two days of arbitration, the parties, for whatever reason, decided to return to mediation. \textit{See id.} Moving from the more adversarial process to the less adversarial process, the parties were able to resolve their dispute prior to the end of the arbitration. \textit{See id.} In his related piece, Phillips noted:

In my view, same-neutral med-arb is the most flexible of all the ADR processes and hybrids. It allows the parties to move from mediation to arbitration when needed and then interrupt the arbitration to mediate again, if that seems desirable. This process allows the parties to profit from the advantages of both mediation and arbitration and offers benefits that neither process offers alone. I believe it motivates the parties to work harder because they want to avoid having to arbitrate. Furthermore, if arbitration becomes necessary, it ensures that a final and binding award will be issued more quickly.

Phillips, \textit{Same-Neutral Med-Arb, supra} note 7, at 28; \textit{see also} Edna Sussman, \textit{The New York Convention Through a Mediation Prism}, DISP. RESOL. MAG., Summer 2009, at 10, 11–12 (discussing the use of an “arb-med-arb” procedure in international disputes such that any resolution reached in the procedure could be enforced as an international arbitration award subject to the New York Convention).

\textsuperscript{39}See Russ Bleemer, \textit{The AIG-Greenberg Neutral on His Settlement Role—Mediation? Or Arbitration? Answer: It’s Both}, 28 ALTERNATIVES TO HIGH COST LITIG. 8, 8 (2010) (“‘Same-neutral’ arbitrations after a mediation to settle a case—or in this case, clean up lingering issues—are controversial. Top practitioners say that they are asked frequently to convert in the midst of the case.”).

In a decision by a California Court of Appeals, the court determined a neutral who performed a hybrid mediation/arbitration procedure was not afforded arbitral immunity because no final and binding decision had been rendered in the case. Morgan Phillips, Inc. v. JAMS/Endispute, L.L.C., 140 Cal. App. 4th 795, 800 (Cal. Ct. App. 2006). This case, while unique factually, may have farther reaching effects for neutrals who perform med-arb. \textit{See id.} In \textit{Morgan Phillips}, the parties proceeded to arbitration; however, after all of the evidence had been taken, the neutral began to mediate the case through private caucuses attempting to settle the case without having to render a final and binding award. \textit{Id.} at 798–99. The parties did not necessarily agree with the procedure, but the facts indicate they did work with the neutral to settle the case. \textit{Id.} For unexplained reasons, the neutral simply gave up trying to resolve the dispute and disqualified himself from rendering an award. \textit{Id.} at 799. Morgan Phillips sued the arbitrator and his provider organization for malpractice. \textit{Id.} at 800. The district court determined arbitral immunity applied, but the court of appeals reversed. \textit{Id.} at 798, 804. The decision is based on the fact that rendering an award is not “integral to the arbitration process,” but the failure to render one signals a “breakdown of that process.” \textit{Id.} at 801. Without an award, the arbitrator is not protected by arbitral immunity,
Med-arb can also be used to break an impasse in mediation.40 If parties in mediation are near resolution but cannot finally resolve their dispute, they may consensually seek the assistance of the mediator to act as an arbitrator in order to resolve the dispute and move on.41 The parties can either plan in advance to use the med-arb procedure prior to beginning their mediation, or they can decide during the mediation that they would rather conclude the process with an award in arbitration rather than starting over in court.42 Although the former procedure might be the more advisable unless the reason for the withdrawal is recognized—such as when the neutral can no longer remain impartial. Id. at 801, 803. Alternatively, the neutral argued he was covered by mediation confidentiality and privilege laws. Id. at 803–04. The court found these arguments without merit at the demurrer stage because the mediation privileges largely deal with evidentiary privilege rather than complete immunity from suit. Id.

Although this case did not explicitly deal with med-arb, and although the parties did not appear to have contracted for med-arb, this decision could impact the law regarding med-arb. See id. Essentially, a med-arb (or arb-med) actually occurred in this case, leaving the arbitrator in a precarious legal position. See id. at 798–99. Because different laws govern the protections for mediators and arbitrators, the neutral may have different protections depending on when the case is ultimately resolved. See id. at 803–04. These types of issues may impact the number of people willing to serve as a neutral in med-arb, especially if the neutral is already concerned about possible malpractice actions due to confidentiality concerns harbored by the parties. See Ficklin v. Penguin Grp. (USA), Inc., No. L-3765-03, 2007 WL 560983, at *1 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. Feb. 26, 2007) (involving a case in which a mediator, who was appointed as an arbitrator in disputes regarding the settlement, requested to be relieved of such duty, which the court granted). It may also caution neutrals to clarify the difference between the two processes. See ADRWorld.com Staff Reporters, Ruling Highlights Need for Clear Outline of ADR Process, CAL. DISP. RESOL. COUNS. (June 27, 2006), at http://www.cdrc.net/pg1018.cfm (noting this ruling “serves as a warning to neutrals to be cautious when switching roles. . . . and it highlights the need to get the parties’ agreement in writing about service as a mediator and further service as an arbitrator”) (internal quotation marks omitted).

40 See HAROLD I. ABRAMSON, MEDIATION REPRESENTATION: ACTING AS A PROBLEM-SOLVER IN ANY COUNTRY OR CULTURE 377 (2d ed. 2010).

41 See id. (“During the course of the mediation, parties may want to replace the court option with arbitration, if the parties think the dispute is suitable for arbitration. Then if the mediation reaches an impasse, the more expeditious and less expensive arbitration option will be in place and can be quickly implemented in order to bring closure to the dispute.”). In addition, the parties who are mediating “in the shadow” of arbitration may have an incentive to settle in the mediation portion of the procedure. See Bartel, supra note 2, at 679 (“Part of the success of med-arb is attributed to the ‘muscle’ which the med-arbitrator who mediates under the shadow of arbitration possesses.”).

42 See Phillips, Trans-Arb, supra note 16, at 152–53 (explaining various disputes which resulted in mediations transforming to med-arbs or beginning as such). Note that med-arb is a different process with a final award and not simply a “mediator’s proposal.” See Bartel, supra process (for the reasons stated below), in practice, the latter occurs more often, presumably by frustrated disputants who prefer the efficiency of same-neutral med-arb to either litigation or an arbitration with a different neutral.43

Finally, med-arb will always result in a binding decision, thus ensuring finality.44 In some instances, the parties favor finality, ensuring they will be back to working together in a timely fashion.45 In other instances, such finality ensures the shortest possible work stoppage of important functions.46 Additionally, med-arb has been cited as a good dispute resolution mechanism for disputes lacking a “perfect answer.”47 In these situations, med-arb allows the parties to explore mediation and try to note 2, at 665. A “mediator’s proposal” is a technique in which a mediator (usually after being asked to do so by the parties) submits a potential settlement to the parties. See id. at 664. The parties are not required to accept the “mediator’s proposal,” so it is not binding like an arbitration award would be. See id.

43 See, e.g., In re Marriage of Rozzi, 190 P.3d 815, 821 (Colo. App. 2008) (invalidating a court order allowing a parenting coordinator to make binding decisions (subject to lodged objections) following unsuccessful negotiations and mediations, but recommending to the trial court that the order should allow the parenting coordinator to make non-binding recommendations to the parents following unsuccessful attempts to resolve issues involving the parents’ minor child); Toiberman v. Tisera, 998 So. 2d 4, 6 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 2008) (invalidating an award by a neutral in a med-arb procedure because Florida law prohibited any cases involving child custody from being arbitrated).

44 See ABRAMSON, supra note 40, at 377.

45 Phillips, Same-Neutral Med-Arb, supra note 7, at 28 (noting that the business relationship is likely to continue after a med-arb).

46 See Bartel, supra note 2, at 677–78; Phillips, Same-Neutral Med-Arb, supra note 7, at 28 (noting that a final and binding award will be issued more quickly). Indeed, med-arb was first used in the public sector for those working in civil and emergency fields. See Bartel, supra note 2, at 677–78. Presumably, these fields weighed the importance of working and maintaining people in these positions highly, thus taking advantage of med-arb’s flexibility and finality. See id.

47 According to the Michigan Pleading and Practice Database, some disputes lend themselves to med-arb. 8A MICH. PL. & PR. § 62B:32 (2d ed. 2005):

For example, in Michigan police and fire fighter interest arbitration, the arbitrator is free to fashion new contract terms over noneconomic issues (for example, drug testing policy) which often lack a perfect answer. Here, the parties often want to share with the arbitrator their needs and interests and to have those needs and interests reflected in the new contractual language. This often may be achieved more genuinely through the joint and private conversations of mediation than through formal testimony of right and wrong.

Id.
resolve their dispute in a conciliatory manner which may allow the parties to preserve their relationships. However, if the mediation does not work, the parties can always rely upon the arbitration hearing to produce a final and binding decision in their case.

B. Confidentiality—and Other—Concerns Associated with Same-Neutral Med-Arb

The biggest and most obvious concern with the same-neutral med-arb procedure is the actual use of confidential mediation communications in fashioning an arbitration award—especially if such use is in violation of a state statute, court rule, or other source of law. Of equal importance is 48 See id. (noting med-arb might be ideal for a divorcing couple who would like the neutral to understand the relationship and dynamic between the parties). In at least one circumstance, parties chose med-arb (albeit different-neutral med-arb) to resolve employment disputes at a Christian school as a means of preserving relationships and resolving disputes in accordance with Christian ideals. See Easterly v. Heritage Christian Sch., Inc., No. 1:08-cv-1714-WTL-TAB, 2009 WL 2750099, at *2 (S.D. Ind. Aug. 26, 2009) (“The parties to this agreement [requiring med-arb] are Christians and believe that the Bible commands them to make every effort to live at peace and to resolve disputes with each other in private or within the Christian community in conformity with the biblical injunctions of 1 Corinthians 6:1-8, Matthew 5:23-24, and Matthew 18:15-20.”); see also Prescott v. Northlake Christian Sch., No. Civ.A. 01-475, 2004 WL 2434997, at *1 (E.D. La. Oct. 29, 2004) (involving a “biblically based” med-arb procedure).

50 See Bartel, supra note 2, at 679; Phillips, Same-Neutral Med-Arb, supra note 7, at 27. Certainly, other disadvantages exist other than the potential for a breach in confidentiality. See Phillips, Same-Neutral Med-Arb, supra note 7, at 27. Gerald Phillips sets forth an entire list of disadvantages most often used by opponents of med-arb including, but not limited to, the fact that the processes are too different in nature for a mediator to be a successful arbitrator and vice versa. Id.; see also Bartel, supra note 2, at 686 (“Criticism of the mediator’s access to arguably confidential information cuts both ways. Parties who agree to take their dispute to med-arb are aware that the dispute ultimately may be decided by the med-arbitrator in his arbitral capacity. Therefore, if a party has information or feelings that he does not want the med-arbitrator to know, he may choose to withhold it. But, he must be aware that such withholding ultimately could hurt him in arbitration.”); Vorys, supra note 37, at 894 (“Some critics even go so far as to say that the same med-arbiter should never be used to perform both processes because during the mediation, participants could become concerned about the ‘neutral’s integrity and grasp of the issues,’ or even his ‘intelligence or . . . neutrality,’ and for that reason request another neutral to perform the rest of the med-arbitration. These concerns often arise from participants’ suspicion that the med-arbiter will not utilize properly the confidential information with which he is armed.” (footnote omitted)). Frank Sander, in his famous “Multi-Door Courthouse” article, commented on some of the potential problems of same neutral med-arb:
that the parties may fear illegal or unethical disclosure, and may therefore be less candid during mediation. The American Arbitration Association (AAA) echoes this concern:

Except in unusual circumstances, a procedure whereby the same individual who has been serving as a mediator becomes an arbitrator when the mediation fails is not recommended, because it could inhibit the candor which should characterize the mediation process and/or it could convey evidence, legal points or settlement positions ex parte, improperly influencing the arbitrator.

Yet despite not recommending such procedure, the AAA does recognize that some parties would choose to utilize such a procedure, and it offers a sample med-arb clause that could be used in a contract. As will be

And while the arbitrator can then seek to play a mediation role, as is done by some arbitrators provided the parties give their consent, there is an obvious difficulty if the mediator-arbitrator is unsuccessful in his mediational role and then seeks to assume the role of impartial judge. For effective mediation may require gaining confidential information from the parties which they may be reluctant to give if they know that it may be used against them in the adjudicatory phase. And even if they do give it, it may then jeopardize the arbitrator’s sense of objectivity. In addition it will be difficult for him to take a disinterested view of the case—and even more so to appear to do so—after he has once expressed his views concerning a reasonable settlement.

51 See Peter Lantka, The Use of Alternative Dispute Resolution in the Federal Magistrate Judge’s Office: A Glimmering Light Amidst the Haze of Federal Litigation, 36 UWLA L. REV. 71, 80 (2005) (noting the benefits of med-arb are “usu ally tempered by the fact that litigants are tempted to hold back information during mediation for fear that it will be used against them at a later date”).

53 AM. ARBITRATION ASS’N, supra note 52, at 38. The sample clause states the parties agree to mediate under AAA rules, and if the mediation fails, the parties agree to arbitrate under AAA rules. Id. Importantly, the sample clause ends: “If all parties to the dispute agree, a mediator involved in the parties’ mediation may be asked to serve as the arbitrator.” Id.

This sample clause, which is intended to be used in a contract as a pre-dispute ADR clause, creates ambiguity as to the timing of the appointment of the arbitrator. As noted infra, the pre-dispute clause could be as specific as requiring a certain neutral to serve as both the mediator and discussed in more detail below, if an arbitrator uses confidential mediation communications in fashioning an award, the award may later be subject to vacatur on the basis that the arbitrator relied on information learned outside of the arbitral hearing.\textsuperscript{54}

Mediations typically involve two types of settings—joint sessions with all of the parties and the mediator present, and caucuses, in which the mediator convenes with less than all of the parties.\textsuperscript{55} As discussed more fully below, the communications involved in both of these settings may be confidential.\textsuperscript{56} Although they may both be confidential, the parties may have different expectations of privacy in a joint session than they do in a caucus.\textsuperscript{57} For example, parties who may be comfortable with the neutral relying on joint session communications in fashioning an award may not be comfortable with the arbitrator relying on caucus communications to fashion the same award.\textsuperscript{58} Information shared in a caucus is meant to be “extra” confidential, and it usually cannot be disclosed to the opposing party without the speaking party’s consent.\textsuperscript{59} This information, which may or may not be admissible in the arbitration portion of the med-arb, in court, or in a subsequent arbitration, could still influence any award rendered in the arbitration portion of the med-arb procedure.\textsuperscript{60} This influence may the arbitrator. See infra Part IV.B. In contrast, the AAA sample clause allows the parties to choose any arbitrator, including the mediator, but it is unclear whether the appointment of the named neutral should take place before the mediation begins or after the mediation has already failed. AM. ARBITRATION ASS’N, supra note 52, at 38. If the clause is interpreted to mean the latter, choosing the arbitrator after a failed mediation could add considerable time to the process, especially if the mediation did not proceed to the expectations of one or more parties.

In addition, this sample clause does not address the issue of whether the mediation communication can be used in the subsequent arbitration portion of the process.

\textsuperscript{54} See infra notes 138–43 and accompanying text.

\textsuperscript{55} Orna Rabinovich-Einy, Going Public: Diminishing Privacy in Dispute Resolution in the Internet Age, 7 VA. J.L. & TECH. 4, 59 (2002) (“The typical structure of mediation processes consists of an initial joint session of the mediator and the parties . . . followed by a series of joint sessions and caucuses (private sessions of the mediator with each party) . . . .”).

\textsuperscript{56} See infra notes 69–72 and accompanying text.

\textsuperscript{57} See supra notes 50 and accompanying text.

\textsuperscript{58} Phillips, Same-Neutral Med-Arb, supra note 7, at 27 (“[A] key [ethical] issue is that the arbitrator’s decision could be influenced by confidential information learned during private caucuses.”).

\textsuperscript{59} Id.

\textsuperscript{60} See id.
become apparent by reading the award itself, or it may manifest itself in a more subtle bias. Parties who are fearful of the neutral’s use of such information may elect to not be candid in mediation rather than risk the possibility the neutral would use such information to that party’s disadvantage at a later point in the proceedings. Alternatively, parties could choose to eliminate the use of the private caucus, but that would also involve eliminating the beneficial aspects of caucusing. If a losing party in arbitration can show that the arbitrator based the award on confidential

61 See Phillips, Back to Med-Arb, supra note 52, at 78. For instance, the arbitrator may award an amount that one party or another disclosed in confidence to the neutral as a “bottom line.”

62 See Phillips, Same-Neutral Med-Arb, supra note 7, at 27 (noting opponents of med-arb have several problems with the process) (“An award might be unfairly influenced by evidence that could not be challenged at the arbitration hearing because it was communicated only to the mediator in a private caucus, but not to the other party.”); see also Gerald F. Phillips, The Survey Says: Practitioners Cautiously Move Toward Accepting Same-Neutral Med-Arb, but Party Sophistication Is Mandatory, 26 ALTERNATIVES TO HIGH COST LITIG. 101, 102 (2008) [hereinafter Phillips, Survey Says] (noting one neutral’s comment on med-arb in a survey) (“If mediation doesn’t work [it is] difficult to avoid [the] appearance of being favorable to one side or the other.” (alteration in original)).

63 Phillips, Same-Neutral Med-Arb, supra note 7, at 27. Additionally, he claims opponents of the med-arb process worry parties “are not as candid or willing to admit weakness in same-neutral med-arb as they are in mediation followed by arbitration with another neutral.” Id.

Rather than using med-arb, the parties could use a procedure known as arb-med, with the arbitration hearing occurring before the mediation session. See Dobbins, supra note 2, at 176. Following the arbitration, the arbitrator usually issues an award and puts it in a sealed envelope. Id. (“One accepted view of this process allows the arbitration to conclude but seals the award. The parties then mediate, equally uncertain about the outcome risk looming in the arbitrator’s envelope.”). Then, the parties mediate. Id. If they resolve their dispute in mediation, the award is destroyed. Arnold M. Zack, The Quest for Finality in Airline Disputes: A Case for Arb-Med, DISP. RESOL. J., Nov. 2003–Jan. 2004, at 34, 35 (“If agreement is reached, the neutral tears up the envelope and the decision is never revealed.”); see also Soc’y of Lloyd’s v. Moore, No. 1:06-CV-286, 2006 WL 3167735, at *1 (S.D. Ohio Nov. 1, 2006) (describing arb-med). If the mediation does not resolve in a settlement, the arbitrator reveals the award. Zack, supra, at 37. Arb-med, like med-arb results in a final decision. Id. However, arb-med will almost always require the use of both procedures, and it is potentially more expensive than med-arb. See John T. Blankenship, Developing Your ADR Attitude: Med-Arb, a Template for Adaptive ADR, TENN. B.J., Nov. 2006, at 28, 31. Arb-med, however, should alleviate any concerns about confidentiality because the neutral renders the award before the mediation occurs. Dobbins, supra note 2, at 177.

64 See Bartel, supra note 2, at 687 (“The obvious solution is to eliminate the private caucus during the mediation phase. This, however, may do more harm than good. The private caucus is often an important aspect of the mediation process because it allows the third-party neutral to explore options with each party separately and to provide a reality check for parties with unrealistic expectations.”).
information, the award may be subject to vacatur for the arbitrator having exceeded his or her powers.\textsuperscript{65}

Same-neutral med-arb may also have other, less-obvious drawbacks. For instance, during the mediation phase, the parties may seek to ingratiate themselves with the neutral.\textsuperscript{66} Perhaps this could manifest itself in the parties acting as if they are on their “best behavior,”\textsuperscript{67} but it could also involve deception or trying to paint the opposing party in a negative light.\textsuperscript{68} Additionally, finding a neutral to serve as a mediator and an arbitrator may be difficult because finding a person with the skills to perform both functions may be a difficult task.\textsuperscript{69} Although time may be saved because the parties only have to select one neutral, finding a mediator-arbitrator may be more difficult than finding one of each.\textsuperscript{70} In some instances, the parties may disagree to such an extent that finding a single mediator-arbitrator could be more difficult and time-consuming than finding both a mediator and an arbitrator.\textsuperscript{71} Another disadvantage of the process could be that in a \textsuperscript{65} See infra note 139 and accompanying text for a more detailed discussion.

\textsuperscript{66} See Phillips, Same-Neutral Med-Arb, supra note 7, at 30 (“Curiously, I found that parties behave better during same-neutral med-arb than in classic mediation. This is probably because they do not want to alienate the potential arbitrator.”). One commentator noted that an early research study found that participants in med-arb acted in a more civil manner than their mediation counterparts, citing this study as a benefit of the med-arb process, not a drawback. See Bartel, supra note 2, at 681–82.
\textsuperscript{67} See Phillips, Same-Neutral Med-Arb, supra note 7, at 30; Bartel, supra note 2, at 681–82.
\textsuperscript{68} See Vorys, supra note 37, at 896.
\textsuperscript{69} See Phillips, Same-Neutral Med-Arb, supra note 7, at 30 (describing the characteristics the parties would like to find in a mediator-arbitrator and noting the ideal candidate should have characteristics amenable to both processes).
\textsuperscript{70} See Phillips, Survey Says, supra note 62, at 103 (noting that it takes “very sophisticated counsel, however, who understands both mediation and arbitration, to make med-arb with the same neutral advantageous”); see also Vorys, supra note 37, at 888 (“The complex and difficult role of the med-arbitrator indicates that the parties should choose their med-arbitrator with care.”).
\textsuperscript{71} See Edna Sussman, Developing an Effective Med-Arb/Arb-Med Process, N.Y. DISP. RESOL. LAW., Spring 2009, at 73; Vorys, supra note 37, at 887–88. When parties select a neutral in med-arb, they should be keenly aware of the qualities that they would like to find in a neutral. See Sussman, supra, at 73 (noting that it is important for parties to consider the qualifications of the neutral for each role and select a neutral with a strong reputation for integrity); Vorys, supra note 37, at 888 (noting the parties should chose a neutral who is skilled in both mediation and arbitration). Some parties may be inclined to find a neutral who is a more accomplished or skilled mediator while others may be interested in finding a neutral with particular arbitration skills. See Sussman, supra, at 73 (noting that arbitration and mediation are two entirely different processes that require different skills; therefore, not every mediator is a good arbitrator and vise versa). These additional complexities may increase the amount of time and effort needed to agree on a poorly-run med-arb, the parties may not be exactly aware when the mediation process has ended and when the arbitration will begin.\textsuperscript{72} Along those lines, it may be unclear who chooses when the mediation has failed and when the parties should enter the arbitration phase.\textsuperscript{73} Finally, the goal of efficiency may not be served if the “settlement facts” crucial to mediation are different from the set of facts pertinent to the arbitration.\textsuperscript{74}

C. For Willing Participants, Same-Neutral Med-Arb Provides Benefits Not Available in Other Procedures

The flexibility of med-arb offers disputants a unique opportunity that is largely unavailable in other processes. As noted above, med-arb offers the disputants the opportunity to act in a collaborative way, but they are ensured that their dispute will be resolved in the event that the collaborative process does not yield a mediated dispute.\textsuperscript{75} No other process integrates these two qualities in the same manner.\textsuperscript{76}

\textsuperscript{72}See Cashin v. Cashin, No. C4-02-902, 2003 WL 42269, at *3 (Minn. Ct. App. Jan 7, 2003) (noting the Minnesota parenting time expeditor has the discretion to determine when the mediation has broken down to such a point its continuation would be futile and when arbitration will more likely result in a final and binding resolution to the issue at hand). In Wisconsin, under the med-arb procedure for grievances by public employees, the neutral determines if the mediation failed to generate a settlement after a “reasonable period” of time. Wis. Stat. Ann. § 111.70 legis. note III (West 2002).

\textsuperscript{73}See Bartel, supra note 2, at 683. Under the court rules for the Northern District of Alabama, N.D. Ala. Loc. R. 16.11(c), parties using the Med/Arb track to settle their disputes will switch from mediation to arbitration upon the neutral’s determination that “further efforts [in mediation] would not be useful.” N.D. Ala. Alt. Dispute Resolution Plan § IV.C.9.e (2006).\textsuperscript{74}See Phillips, Same-Neutral Med-Arb, supra note 7, at 27; see Bartel, supra note 2, at 686. Although some of the facts pertinent to the mediation will be in common with the facts pertinent to the arbitration, the neutral may focus on different types of information in the mediation and arbitration phase. See Phillips, Same-Neutral Med-Arb, supra note 7, at 27; see Bartel, supra note 2, at 686. Any number of facts might be pertinent to a mediation settlement (i.e., a respondent’s ability to pay or a claimant’s immediate need for compensation) that have little or nothing to do with the merits of the dispute. See Phillips, Same-Neutral Med-Arb, supra note 7, at 27; see Bartel, supra note 2, at 686.

\textsuperscript{75}See supra notes 3–4 and accompanying text.

\textsuperscript{76}McLean & Wilson, supra note 3, at 30 ("Med-Arb agreements allow parties to combine the benefits of two ADR processes—mediation and arbitration . . . ."). There exist some similarities between the trial process and the med-arb process. See Blankenship, supra note 63, at 35–36. Specifically, one of the legal fictions that trial lawyers encounter every day is the fact that judges and juries will hear information that will later need to be disregarded due to some evidentiary
However, the criticisms of med-arb are valid and should be addressed—particularly the criticisms relating to confidentiality. The remainder of this Article deals specifically with confidentiality. The next section looks at statutory protections for mediation communications and the effect of confidentiality and/or privilege on the arbitration portion of a med-arb procedure. These statutes generally provide an all-encompassing protection for mediation communications, without exception for med-arb procedures. Case law, discussed in Part V, supports this view. Accordingly, this Article recommends that parties, with the assistance of the neutral, if necessary, execute specific contracts dealing with the treatment of confidential information in the arbitration portion of med-arb.

IV. MEDIATION CONFIDENTIALITY STATUTES MAKE NO EXCEPTIONS FOR THE MED-ARB PROCEDURE

Parties and neutrals involved in med-arb may not realize that the communications made in a mediation session—even in joint session with everyone present—cannot be used in the arbitration portion of the same hearing without an express agreement to use some or all of those communications in the arbitration. Such express agreement is necessary because general mediation confidentiality statutes, court rules, and other laws provide for the confidentiality of mediation communications without hurdle that has not been met by the proponent of the evidence. Id. As noted by one commentator: “Judges and juries are regularly required to ignore information that has been deemed improper. No one seems to seriously question the concept that a judge presiding over a bench trial is required to, and can, disregard evidence he or she has heard but has subsequently determined to be inadmissible.” Id. Certainly, if judges and juries can disregard evidence that otherwise might have some effect on the decision-maker, then neutrals picked by the parties to resolve their dispute likewise should be trusted to base arbitration awards on the proper scope of evidence. See id.

77 See infra Part IV.
79 See infra Part V.
80 See infra Part VI.
81 This Article focuses on mediation-specific statutes and does not consider the effect of Federal Rule of Evidence 408 (Rule 408), dealing with the admissibility of offers to compromise, or similar state evidentiary statutes. Whether Rule 408 and their state counterparts have any application in arbitration is beyond the scope of this Article. Even if Rule 408 applies to the arbitration portion of med-arb, the applicability to the arbitration portion of med-arb is limited because the scope of the Rule is quite limited. See FED. R. EVID. 408 (applying to offers to compromise for the limited purpose of establishing liability).
82 See UNIF. MEDIATION ACT §§ 4, 5.
exception for med-arb procedures. This Section first considers confidentiality in the context of states adopting the Uniform Mediation Act and then considers confidentiality in other jurisdictions.

A. Jurisdictions Adopting the Uniform Mediation Act Explicitly Treat Mediation Communications as Privileged in Subsequent Arbitrations

The clearest expression of this general confidentiality is contained in the Uniform Mediation Act (UMA), which has been adopted in eleven jurisdictions and introduced in another two. The UMA provides the parties to a mediation with a general privilege protecting the mediation communications from involuntary disclosure in later proceedings. The privilege afforded to mediation communications is as follows:

(a) Except as otherwise provided in Section 6, a mediation communication is privileged as provided in subsection (b) and is not subject to discovery or admissible in evidence in a proceeding unless waived or precluded as provided by Section 5.

(b) In a proceeding, the following privileges apply:

(1) A mediation party may refuse to disclose, and may prevent any other person from disclosing, a mediation communication.

(2) A mediator may refuse to disclose a mediation communication, and may prevent any other person from disclosing a mediation communication of the mediator.

(3) A nonparty participant may refuse to disclose, and may prevent any other person from disclosing, a mediation communication of the nonparty participant.

(c) Evidence or information that is otherwise admissible or subject to discovery does not become inadmissible or protected from discovery solely by reason of its disclosure or use in a mediation.86

Pursuant to the statutory definitions, “proceeding” is defined as “a judicial, administrative, arbitral, or other adjudicative process, including related pre-hearing and post-hearing motions, conferences, and discovery.”87 The explicit inclusion of the “arbitral” proceeding means that all mediation communications are privileged in the arbitration portion of the med-arb, absent any waiver of the privilege by the privilege-holders.88 In addition to creating a privilege, the UMA also affords confidentiality to mediation communications to the extent that state or other applicable confidentiality protections apply.89

86 Id.; see also Sarah R. Cole et al., Mediation: Law, Policy & Practice § 9.1 (2008) (“Laws of privilege are key determinants of the confidentiality afforded in mediation or other dispute resolution processes.”); Cole et al., supra § 9.4 (“The evidentiary exclusions for compromise discussions differ from privileges, which usually provide protection against any disclosure rather than merely protection against admission into evidence at a court hearing. Thus, most mediation privileges govern use of the mediation information in all forums—not just those judicial hearings governed by the rules of evidence, as with evidentiary exclusions.” (footnote omitted)). Section 6 contains exceptions to the privilege, none of which are applicable here. See Unif. Mediation Act § 6. Perhaps a litigant could make the argument that med-arb is not mediation at all, based on a theory that the hybrid procedure changes the mediation process in such a fundamental way that the “mediation” occurring in med-arb is not mediation as that term is defined and intended to be. See Bartel, supra note 2, at 665.

87 Unif. Mediation Act § 2(7).

88 See id. § 2; see also id. § 4. As stated above, the different participants to mediation each hold their own privilege. See supra notes 82, 85–86 and accompanying text. The parties hold a privilege with respect to all mediation communications. Unif. Mediation Act § 4(b)(1). The mediator holds a privilege as to the communications made by the mediator. Id. § 4(b)(2). Non-party participants hold a privilege as to the statements made by the non-parties. Id. § 4(b)(3). For a waiver to occur, all applicable privilege holders must agree to the waiver. See id. § 5.

This article treats med-arb as a combination of two procedures—not as a separate procedure. Given the mandatory nature of the UMA and the other statutes discussed below, no practical difference may exist between whether med-arb is a hybrid procedure or a distinct procedure.

89 Unif. Mediation Act § 8 (“Unless subject to the [insert statutory references to open meetings act and open records act], mediation communications are confidential to the extent agreed by the parties or provided by other law or rule of this State.” (alternation in original)).
Although the privilege is absolute, it can be waived. If fewer than all parties waive the privilege, however, the non-waiving party will be able to raise a confidential objection and prevent the use of the mediation communications in the subsequent procedure. The applicable waiver provision reads:

(a) A privilege under Section 4 may be waived in a record or orally during a proceeding if it is expressly waived by all parties to the mediation and:

(1) in the case of the privilege of a mediator, it is expressly waived by the mediator; and

(2) in the case of the privilege of a nonparty participant, it is expressly waived by the nonparty participant.

Thus, the mediation privilege must be expressly waived in order to use the mediation communications in another proceeding. No exception exists for the use of mediation communications in the arbitration portion of a med-arb procedure.

If no exception exists and the parties do not execute a waiver, then a full and complete arbitration hearing is necessary. Because the mediation communications are privileged and confidential, they cannot constitute

---

90 Id. § 5(a).
91 Id.; see also Phillips, Same-Neutral Med-Arb, supra note 7, at 27. As noted above, parties to a mediation have the ability to prevent anyone from disclosing any of the mediation communications. See supra note 88 and accompanying text. The mediator can prevent others from disclosing statements made by the mediator, and non-parties can likewise prevent others from disclosing statements made by the non-party. UNIF. MEDIATION ACT § 4(b); see COLE ET AL., supra note 86, § 9.4 (“The privilege may be raised by or on behalf of anyone who holds it, while the evidentiary objection must usually be made by a party to the litigation.”); see also COLO. REV. STAT. ANN. § 13-22-307 (West Supp. 2010); HAW. R. EVID. 408; ME. R. EVID. 408(b); VT. R. EVID. 408, 501(b).
92 UNIF. MEDIATION ACT § 5(a). Subsection (b) provides: “A person that discloses or makes a representation about a mediation communication which prejudices another person in a proceeding is precluded from asserting a privilege under Section 4, but only to the extent necessary for the person prejudiced to respond to the representation or disclosure.” Id. § 5(b).
93 Id. § 5(a).
94 See id. § 4 (stating that privilege is unavailable only when waived under Section 5 or excluded under Section 6); id. § 6 (listing the exceptions to privilege with no exception listed for the arbitration portion of a med-arb procedure).
“evidence” in the arbitration portion of the med-arb without a waiver. 95
This rule applies to information learned in joint session and caucus alike. 96 Without waiver, this rule operates to defeat one of the primary benefits of med-arb—the ability to have a truncated arbitration hearing because the parties had the opportunity to educate the neutral during the mediation stage. 97  Indeed, parties who turn to med-arb as a means of breaking an impasse in mediation must be particularly careful to execute the appropriate waivers because those parties may have little or no arbitration “evidence” upon which the arbitrator can make an award.98  If a med-arb neutral does not secure the appropriate waivers, then any arbitration award issued may be subject to vacatur for the arbitrator having decided the case without competent evidence.99

B. Broad Confidentiality Statutes in non-UMA Jurisdictions Likewise
Have No Exemption for Arbitration Procedures

Although the eleven states adopting the UMA have relatively straightforward confidentiality requirements, even those states that have not adopted the UMA may also provide for the confidentiality of mediation communications, prohibiting their use in any other proceeding, including, arguably, the arbitration portion of a med-arb procedure. 100  Every state’s

---

95 See supra note 91 and accompanying text.
96 See supra note 91 and accompanying text.
97 See supra notes 30–31 and accompanying text.
98 See supra note 41 and accompanying text.  Occasionally, parties may be close to settlement but reach impasse for any number of reasons. See supra note 41 and accompanying text. Those parties may request that the neutral break the mediation impasse by simply issuing an award as an arbitrator. See supra note 41 and accompanying text. Often, in these types of cases, the parties do not intend to present any additional information during the arbitration phase, but instead intend to submit the mediation information to the neutral for a final determination as a decision-maker. See 99 See 9 U.S.C. § 10(a)(4) (2006). An arbitrator has likely exceeded the powers afforded to the arbitrator under the Federal Arbitration Act when a case is decided on no evidence or incompetent evidence. See id.
100 Folb v. Motion Picture Indus. Pension & Health Plans, 16 F. Supp. 2d 1164, 1179 (C.D. Cal. 1998) (“At the forefront of the inquiry, however, is the fact that every state in the Union, with the exception of Delaware, has adopted a mediation privilege of one type or another . . . . While some states provide only limited protection, a majority of the states go beyond protecting communications in private sessions with the mediator, requiring that the entire process be confidential. A number of states provide explicitly that information disclosed in mediation proceedings is not subject to discovery.” (citations omitted)).
Keeping a Secret From Yourself?

Confidentiality rules are different, and a practitioner would be wise to consult them before participating in a med-arb procedure—either as an attorney or as a neutral. No matter what the rules, a careful waiver executed by the parties will avoid any of these issues regarding confidentiality.

Some states have comprehensive mediation confidentiality or privileges that would appear to apply to med-arb because the statutes and rules have no exceptions for med-arb procedures. California has a mediation privilege similar to the UMA: “(a) No evidence of anything said . . . in the course of . . . a mediation . . . is admissible or subject to discovery, and disclosure of the evidence shall not be compelled, in any arbitration, administrative adjudication, civil action, or other noncriminal proceeding . . . .” Florida has a similarly broad statute: “(2) A mediation party has a privilege to refuse to testify and to prevent any other person from testifying in a subsequent proceeding regarding mediation communications.” Alabama has a mediation rule requiring that all mediation communications be confidential: “All information disclosed in the course of a mediation, including oral, documentary, or electronic information, shall be deemed confidential and shall not be divulged by anyone in attendance at the mediation except as permitted under this Rule or by statute.” The rule permits disclosure when “the mediator and the parties to the mediation all agree to the disclosure.” Otherwise, the 101 See Cole et al., supra note 86, § 9.10 (discussing how mediation privileges in different jurisdictions “vary considerably”).

---

102 See supra Part IV.A.

103 Unlike the UMA, often these statutes or rules do not mention arbitration specifically. See, e.g., Ala. R. Civ. Ct. Med. 11(a) (LexisNexis 2009). However, a generally applicable statute with no relevant exceptions arguably applies to the arbitration portion of a med-arb situation. In any event, a “best practice” would be to secure a waiver. See Phillips, Same-Neutral Med-Arb, supra note 7, at 31.

105 Fla. Stat. Ann. § 44.405(2) (West Supp. 2011). Under the definitions section, a “subsequent proceeding” means “an adjudicative process that follows a mediation, including related discovery.” Id. § 44.403(5).

107 Id. R. 11(b)(1). This confidentiality is arguably broader than the privilege afforded by the UMA. Compare id., with Unif. Mediation Act. § 4, 7A U.L.A. 117 (Supp. 2010). The UMA allows disclosure if the privilege-holders waive the privilege. Unif. Mediation Act § 5. Under this Alabama rule, all of the mediation participants must waive the confidentiality no matter who made the applicable statement. See Ala. R. Civ. Ct. Med. 11(b)(1). The exceptions to the rule information remains confidential. 108 Connecticut has a mediation confidentiality statute explicitly for non-court-connected mediation that similarly requires a waiver of the confidentiality before those mediation statements can be used in other contexts. 109 Louisiana and Oklahoma have similarly broad confidentiality statutes that apply to all “proceedings,” but they are unclear as to whether “proceedings” would include arbitration proceedings. 110 In states with such broad confidentiality rules, the parties

108 ALA. R. CIV. CT. MED. 11(a).

109 Section 52-235d of the General Statutes of Connecticut provides, in applicable part:

(a) As used in this section, “mediation” means a process, or any part of a process, which is not court-ordered . . . .

(b) Except as provided in this section, by agreement of the parties or in furtherance of settlement discussions, a person not affiliated with either party to a lawsuit, an attorney for one of the parties or any other participant in a mediation shall not voluntarily disclose or, through discovery or compulsory process, be required to disclose any oral or written communication received or obtained during the course of a mediation, unless (1) each of the parties agrees in writing to such disclosure, (2) the disclosure is necessary to enforce a written agreement that came out of the mediation, (3) the disclosure is required by statute or regulation, or by any court, after notice to all parties to the mediation, or (4) the disclosure is required as a result of circumstances in which a court finds that the interest of justice outweighs the need for confidentiality, consistent with the principles of law.

CONN. GEN. STAT. ANN. § 52-235d(a) & (b) (West Supp. 2010) (emphasis added); see also DEL. CODE ANN. tit. 6, § 7716 (Supp. 2008) (“All ADR proceedings shall be confidential and any memoranda submitted to the ADR Specialist, any statements made during the ADR and any notes or other materials made by the ADR Specialist or any party in connection with the ADR shall not be subject to discovery or introduced into evidence in any proceeding and shall not be construed to be a waiver of any otherwise applicable privilege.”); KAN. STAT. ANN. § 60-452a(a) (Supp. 2010) (“All verbal or written information transmitted between any party to a dispute and a neutral person conducting the proceeding, or the staff of an approved program under K.S.A. 5-501 et seq. and amendments thereto shall be confidential communications. No admission, representation or statement made in the proceeding shall be admissible as evidence or subject to discovery.”); TEX. CIV. PRAC. & REM. CODE ANN. § 154.053(b) (West Supp. 2010) (“Unless expressly authorized by the disclosing party, the impartial third party may not disclose to either party information given in confidence by the other and shall at all times maintain confidentiality with respect to communications relating to the subject matter of the dispute.”).

110 See LA. REV. STAT. ANN. § 9:4112 (Supp. 2011). Section § 9:4112 provides:

A. Except as provided in this Section, all oral and written communications and records made during mediation, whether or not conducted under this Chapter and whether before or after the institution of formal judicial proceedings, are not subject to and the mediator should be careful to secure written waivers to make clear how the parties want the neutral to treat the mediation communications and whether they can be considered in the arbitration portion of the hearing.\textsuperscript{111}

In addition to considering whether a state has a general confidentiality statute, some states deal with mediation communications within a particular subject area. For instance, the mediation provisions within the title on labor in Massachusetts provide that a mediator who “receives information as a mediator relating to the labor dispute shall not be required to reveal such information received by him in the course of mediation in any administrative, civil or arbitration proceeding.”\textsuperscript{112} As this statute demonstrates, examining a state’s general confidentiality statutes may or may not be enough to determine whether the mediation communications are confidential, privileged, or otherwise incompetent evidence in the arbitration portion of a med-arb procedure.\textsuperscript{113}

As these statutes and rules demonstrate, any number of sources of law may operate to make mediation communications confidential or privileged.\textsuperscript{114} If that is the case, the communications likely cannot constitute competent evidence upon which an arbitrator can render an award disclosure, and may not be used as evidence in any judicial or administrative proceeding.

\begin{enumerate}
\item \textbf{E. Confidentiality, in whole or in part, may be waived when all parties and the mediator specifically agree in writing.}
\end{enumerate}

\textit{Id.} The Oklahoma statute provides:

\begin{enumerate}
\item A. Any information received by a mediator or a person employed to assist a mediator, through files, reports, interviews, memoranda, case summaries, or notes and work products of the mediator, is privileged and confidential.
\end{enumerate}

\begin{enumerate}
\item C. No mediator, initiating party, or responding party in a mediation proceeding shall be subject to administrative or judicial process requiring disclosure of any matters discussed or shall disclose any information obtained during any part of the mediation proceedings.
\end{enumerate}

\textsuperscript{113} \textit{See id.}

\textsuperscript{114} \textit{See supra} notes 104–12.
absent a waiver.\textsuperscript{115} For these reasons, the parties to the procedure should carefully consider which communications they would like to constitute a basis upon which the neutral can render an award.\textsuperscript{116}

V. COURTS ARE HESITANT TO UPHOLD ARBITRATION AGREEMENTS IN MED-ARB WHEN THE PARTIES HAVE NOT EXPRESSLY CONSENTED TO THE USE OF MEDIATION COMMUNICATIONS IN THE ARBITRATION

Although a relatively small number of courts have addressed issues relating to med-arb and the treatment of confidential information within the process, the cases that have are instructive as to the treatment of mediation communications in the arbitration portion without proper consent by the parties.\textsuperscript{117} As the discussion below demonstrates, the courts look to whether the parties consented to the med-arb process and whether the parties expressly waived any or all of the mediation communications for use in the arbitration process. This section details the most significant cases dealing with these issues.

A. Bowden v. Weickert—Vacating an Award in Med-Arb Explicitly Based on Mediation Communications

One of the cases dealing most comprehensively with the confidentiality issues in med-arb is \textit{Bowden v. Weickert}, from the Ohio Court of Appeals.\textsuperscript{118} The case deals with a contract dispute involving the sale of an insurance business. The contract at issue required arbitration, but the neutral suggested—and the parties agreed—that it might be wise for the neutral to first attempt to mediate the case. After two days of mediation, the parties signed a handwritten document purporting to sell the business for a certain price. The agreement, however, was preliminary, and both parties expected to “flesh out” the details of the settlement in another document. However, the parties were ultimately unable to finalize the contract, and the dispute proceeded to arbitration before the same neutral.

After a hearing, the arbitrator issued an award containing some of the terms of the handwritten mediated settlement, including the price. The award contained some new terms that were considered when the parties drafted the handwritten agreement. The award also addressed issues not part of the proposed mediated agreement, which were apparently decided based on industry norms. The award also included provisions that seemed completely unrelated to the original purchase contract and the mediation settlement.

The buyers moved to vacate the arbitration award under Ohio law on the ground the arbitrator exceeded his authority “by attempting to modify the [handwritten mediation] agreement entered into by the parties . . . .” After acknowledging the high standard required to vacate an arbitration award, the court considered how the hybrid mediation-arbitration procedure employed in the case affected the outcome. The court noted that arbitration procedures are those involving the “hearing and determining of a

119 Id. at *1.
120 Id. The situation in which an arbitrator suggests mediation has the potential to put the parties in a precarious situation. The parties, even if they actually do not want to mediate, might feel compelled to participate in mediation or else express a lack of confidence in the neutral who may later issue a ruling in the case.
121 Id.
122 Id. at *2.
123 Id.
124 Id. at *2–3.
125 Id. at *3. For instance, the arbitration award contained a provision regarding interest due on installment payments—an option discussed in a proposed draft of the mediated settlement agreement. Id.
126 See id.
127 Id. For instance, the award included information regarding the handling of certain documents. Id.
128 Id. at *4.
129 Id. at *4–6.
case between parties in controversy by a person or persons chosen by the parties . . . instead of by a judicial tribunal” while a mediation is “a procedure by which the parties negotiate a resolution to their dispute with the assistance of a third party mediator.”

Because the buyer and seller engaged in mediation, Ohio law required the mediation communications to remain confidential. Further, “[M]ediation communications shall not be disclosed in any other proceeding unless all parties and the mediator consent to the disclosure.”

The court ultimately vacated the arbitral award because the arbitrator clearly used mediation communications to fashion the award, as evidenced by the price term. The court reasoned that although the mediation failed and the parties utilized arbitration, “the arbitrator had a duty to remain impartial[] and to protect the confidentiality of all mediation communications.” Thus, in deciding the case, the arbitrator could rely only upon the original contract and evidence presented at the arbitration hearing without exceeding his powers. The court also noted that the use of med-arb in this instance resulted in the use of multiple proceedings, prolonging resolution of the sale dispute “for over three years, resulting in expenditures of time, effort, and money by all concerned, with no final resolution yet in sight.” However, the overriding concerns for mediation confidentiality dictated the result in the case.

Bowden v. Weickert clearly demonstrates the problems discussed above regarding the intersection of a broad confidentiality for mediation communications and a med-arb procedure. Under Bowden, if a party can 131 Id. at *6 (citing OHIO REV. CODE ANN. § 2317.023(B) (LexisNexis 2010) (repealed)).

---

132 Id. (citing OHIO REV. CODE ANN. § 2317.023(C)(1) (LexisNexis 2010) (repealed)).
133 Id. at *7.
134 Id. at *6.
135 Id. at *6–7 (vacating the arbitral award because the “arbitrator’s award was based, at least in part, on the terms of the parties’ failed attempt at a mediated settlement, as set forth in the handwritten mediation document”).
136 Id. at *7.
137 See id.
138 See supra Part IV. Many states have confidentiality laws prohibiting the use of mediation communications in subsequent litigation. See Marchal v. Craig, 681 N.E.2d 1160, 1163 (Ind. Ct. App. 1997) (noting Indiana law prohibits use of mediation communications in subsequent proceedings); see, e.g., MASS. ANN. LAWS ch. 150, § 10A (LexisNexis 1999); OKLA. STAT.
prove that—in the absence of a waiver—the arbitrator considered mediation communications in fashioning an award, the award may be subject to vacatur.\textsuperscript{139} In \textit{Bowden}, the use of mediation communications was clearly expressed in the award.\textsuperscript{140} Despite vacating the award, the Ohio court acknowledged that parties have the right to engage in a procedure such as med-arb, provided they willingly agree to the procedure.\textsuperscript{141} The court stated: “Such proceedings, when properly executed, are innovative and creative ways to further the purpose of alternative dispute resolution.”\textsuperscript{142} However, because of the potential for the disclosure of confidential communication, the court warned “certain ground rules” must be evident “at the outset,” making clear the parties’ intent to participate in med-arb.\textsuperscript{143} The court stated, “At a minimum, the record must include clear evidence that the parties have agreed to engage in a med-arb process . . . .”\textsuperscript{144} Additionally, the court noted the record must contain: (1) “evidence that the parties are aware that the mediator will function as an arbitrator if the mediation attempt fails”; (2) evidence of a “written stipulation as to the agreed method of submitting their disputed factual issues to an arbitrator if the mediation fails”; and (3) “evidence of whether the parties agree to waive \textsuperscript{139} \textit{Bowden}, 2003 WL 21419175, at *7.

\textsuperscript{140} Id. In some circumstances, ADR proceedings are not afforded the benefit of confidentiality. See Firestone v. Berger, No. A05-267, 2006 WL 224158, *2–3 (Minn. Ct. App. Jan. 31, 2006) (noting statements made in child-custody med-arb are not confidential under Minnesota law). In those situations, mediation communications could be later used in a med-arb arbitration. See id.

\textsuperscript{141} Bowden, 2003 WL 21419175, at *6.

\textsuperscript{142} Id. The court continued by noting that despite the benefits of med-arb, because of the “confidential nature of mediation,” the parties need to enter the process willingly. Id. One of the court’s reasons for informed consent is based on the “high probability that both proceedings [mediation and arbitration] are likely to be employed before [the] disputes are resolved . . . .” Id. The opinion is unclear as to why the court believes parties who participate in med-arb are likely to use both procedures. In fact, at least one practitioner has reported that the “dispute usually is settled in the ensuing mediation.” Phillips, Trans-Arb, supra note 16, at 152. In a different article, Phillips also stated a benefit of same-neutral med-arb is the “parties’ business relationship is more likely to continue after same-neutral med-arb since the dispute is likely to be settled in whole or in part in mediation.” Phillips, Same-Neutral Med-Arb, supra note 7, at 28.

\textsuperscript{143} Bowden, 2003 WL 21419175, at *6.

\textsuperscript{144} Id.
the confidentiality requirements” imposed by Ohio law. The court indicated that it would only uphold an award in med-arb if all of the elements of the above test are met.

B. Town of Clinton v. Geological Services Corp.—Ruling That the Use of Med-Arb Does Not Constitute an Implicit Waiver of Mediation Confidentiality

A Massachusetts superior court addressed the confidentiality issues involved in the med-arb process in the context of a post med-arb motion to compel discovery made by a third party who did not participate in the med-arb. Defendant Garrett Engineering (Garrett) sought documents associated with a med-arb procedure between the plaintiff Town of Clinton (Clinton) and third party Methuen Construction Co. (Methuen). In the med-arb, the arbitrator awarded Methuen $1.2 million, and Clinton brought suit against Garrett, seeking reimbursement or indemnity of the money paid to Methuen. Unsurprisingly, Garrett sought information relating to the med-arb procedures from Clinton and brought a motion to compel the 145 Id.; see Med-Arb, DISP. RESOL. J., Aug.–Oct. 2003, at 91 (describing these four requirements). An arbitrator’s opinion referenced in the California case Levy v. Seiberlich expressed a similar idea that the arbitrator would not consider any mediation communications in a different-neutral med-arb without any evidence that the mediation had been successful. No. A120212, 2008 WL 4726456, at *1 (Cal. Ct. App. Oct. 29, 2008) (“Levy raised the question of whether there had been a binding settlement reached during an earlier mediation. I did listen to Levy’s basis for believing that mediation was admissible as part of the arbitration. There is no record of a settlement agreement being either recorded or reduced to writing and signed by both parties. Pursuant to the holding in Rojas v. Superior Court, I denied Levy’s request.” (citation omitted)).

148 Id. at *1.

149 Id. ("Clinton has now brought this action to recover the money awarded to Methuen at the arbitration.").
Clinton successfully defended the motion on the basis of the Massachusetts mediation privilege. Clinton produced arbitration documents to Garrett but withheld its mediation documents on the basis of privilege. Clinton specifically withheld eighteen mediation documents, including the dispute resolution agreement, a position statement, and other documents solicited by the neutral during the mediation phase of the case. Garrett conceded that mediation documents are privileged under Massachusetts law but claimed that the documents’ relation to the otherwise non-privileged arbitration procedure brought them outside of the realm of the privilege. The court rejected Garrett’s arguments. The court, citing precedent, noted that the Massachusetts mediation privilege does not contain any exceptions and is silent as to whether it can be waived at all. Given the policy in favor of confidentiality for mediation statements, the court held that no waiver

---

150 See id. Certainly, no one could blame Garrett for seeking to discover this material. Garrett was likely interested in knowing what facts and legal arguments prevailed for Methuen and how Garrett could use that information to its advantage. See id. Additionally, Garrett might have been interested in learning more about the med-arb procedure to determine whether it had any collateral estoppel arguments against Clinton. See id.

151 Id. at *3.

152 See id. at *1. The opinion does not explain why Clinton disclosed the arbitration documents without a greater fight. See id. Presumably, Massachusetts does not have a statutory or common-law privilege protecting arbitration confidentiality, and the opinion does not state whether Clinton had any other confidentiality obligations toward Methuen or any other party. See id.

153 Id. at *1 n.2.

154 The Massachusetts statute dealing with mediation privilege is MASS. ANN. LAWS ch. 233, § 23C (LexisNexis 2009) (“All memoranda, and other work product prepared by a mediator and a mediator’s case files shall be confidential and not subject to disclosure in any judicial . . . proceeding[s] involving any of the parties to any mediation to which such materials apply. Any communication made in the course of and relating to the subject matter of any mediation and which is made in the presence of such mediator by any participant, mediator or other person shall be a confidential communication and not subject to disclosure in any judicial . . . proceeding . . . “)).

155 Town of Clinton, 2006 WL 3246464, at *1 (“Presumably, Garrett takes the position that because the mediation process came to an end and was followed by an arbitration process involving the same parties, all documents generated during the mediation now ‘relate’ to the subsequent arbitration and should be available in discovery.”).

156 Id. at *3.

exception existed under the statute.\textsuperscript{158} In particular, the court expressed a concern that the parties would not participate in the mediation openly if they feared that confidential information would be used to their disadvantage during the arbitration phase of the procedure.\textsuperscript{159} The Clinton court, similar to the Bowden court, relied heavily on the fact that the parties to the related mediation did not express any intent to waive their mediation privilege:

When the parties struck a bargain to enter into an ADR process, they agreed that if mediation failed, they would move to arbitration. However, they made no further agreement to waive the privilege of confidentiality. The mere fact that the mediation portion of the ADR process did not result in an agreement or resolution does not serve as an implicit waiver of the privilege. Under the circumstances of this case, there has been no waiver of the blanket confidentiality privilege conferred by G.L. c. 233 § 23C, and therefore, to the extent that Garrett seeks documents produced during the mediation that were never \textsuperscript{158} Id. at *3.

\textsuperscript{159} See id. at *2–3. The court relied heavily on law review articles, including the following quotation:

The willingness of mediation parties to ‘open up’ is essential to the success of the process. The mediation process is purposefully informal to encourage a broad ranging discussion of facts, feelings, issues, underlying interests and possible solutions to the parties’ conflict. Mediation’s private setting invites parties to speak openly, with complete candor. In addition, mediators often hold private meetings—‘caucuses’—with each of the parties. More overt assurances of confidentiality are common. Mediators regularly require all present to promise to keep mediation discussions confidential, and routinely assure participants that the proceedings are confidential (whether or not legal protection is certain). Under such circumstances, mediation parties often reveal personal and business secrets, share deep-seated feelings about others, and make admissions of fact and law. Without adequate legal protection, a party’s candor in mediation might well be ‘rewarded’ by a discovery request or the revelation of mediation information at trial. A principal purpose of the mediation privilege is to provide mediation parties protection against these downside risks of a failed mediation. Participation will diminish if perceptions of confidentiality are not matched by reality.

\textit{Id. at *2} (quoting Alan Kirtley, \textit{The Mediation Privilege’s Transition from Theory to Implementation: Designing a Mediation Privilege Standard to Protect Mediation Participants, the Process and the Public Interest}, 1995 J. DISP. RESOL. 1, 8–10 (1995)).
resubmitted or otherwise independently utilized during the arbitration, Garrett’s motion must be DENIED.160

Accordingly, any waiver of the mediation privilege must be clear and explicit by the parties holding the privilege, even in the med-arp context.161 This case is consistent with Bowden in that the mediation privilege is preserved unless and until it is waived.162 In addition, any waiver must be explicit, rather than implicit, and made by the holders of the privilege.163

C. In re Cartwright—Providing Extraordinary Relief to Parties Urged to Use Med-Arb When One Party Does Not Consent to the Procedure

The Texas opinion of In re Cartwright dealt with a confidentiality issue in a contract that specifically required the med-arp procedure, but the contract did not specify how mediation communications would be treated in the arbitration.164 The Cartwright case involved a multi-step dispute resolution mechanism in a divorce decree,165 naming James Patrick Smith as the neutral for both mediation and arbitration in post-divorce disputes.166

160 Id. at *3 (emphasis added); see also Folb v. Motion Picture Indus. Pension & Health Plans, 16 F. Supp. 2d 1164, 1181 (C.D. Cal. 1998) (establishing a mediation privilege when a party sought discovery of mediation communications); Confidentiality After Med-Arb, DISP. RESOL. J., May–July 2007, at 6, 6–7. A federal court in Ohio came to a similar conclusion when considering whether a mediation document in an arb-med procedure (another hybrid procedure in which the arbitration portion occurs first) could be considered in the resolution of a motion to vacate an arbitration award. Soc’y of Lloyd’s v. Moore, No. 1:06-CV-286, 2006 WL 3167735, at *2 (S.D. Ohio Nov. 1, 2006). The Ohio federal court similarly relied on the importance of the mediation privilege and the fact that the parties never intended on waiving their mediation privilege, despite their use of the hybrid procedure. Id. at *4–5 (relying on Bowden v. Weickert, No. S-02-017, 2003 WL 21419175, at *6 (Ohio Ct. App. June 20, 2003)).

161 Town of Clinton, 2006 WL 3246464, at *3; see also Folb, 16 F. Supp. 2d at 1180.

163 Folb, 16 F. Supp. 2d at 1180.

164 104 S.W.3d 706, 708 (Tex. App.—Houston [1st Dist.] 2003, no pet.).

165 Id. at 708.

166 Id. The agreement incident to the divorce stated:

Any claim or controversy arising out of the Final Decree of Divorce . . . or the Agreement Incident to Divorce that cannot be resolved by direct negotiation will be mediated [according to Texas law] with JAMES PATRICK SMITH. If the parties cannot resolve the matter through mediation, then JAMES PATRICK SMITH shall be the arbitrator to arbitrate all disputes.
The parties filed actions against each other regarding the disposition of their marital property and the child custody arrangements, and the husband successfully moved the court to compel mediation/arbitration before Smith, in accordance with their agreement.167

When the parties ran into difficulties scheduling with Smith, the court appointed the Honorable Mary Sean O’Reilly to serve as the parties’ arbitrator.168 The husband objected to this appointment because Judge O’Reilly previously served as a mediator when the parties agreed to their original child-custody agreement.169 The court overruled the husband’s objection on the basis that the arbitration dealt solely with property issues and that any confidential information learned by Judge O’Reilly in the previous mediation would be peripheral to the property issues remaining.170 The husband then sought a writ of mandamus to reverse the ruling, which was granted.171

The court initially found that the parties agreed to arbitrate, and that, given the difficulties in scheduling with Smith, the district court did not abuse its discretion in appointing an arbitrator other than Smith.172 The court next turned to the appropriateness of Judge O’Reilly as an arbitrator,173 focusing on Texas mediation confidentiality laws.174

---

167 Id. at 709.
168 Id. at 710. The procedural history of this case is a bit muddled. The parties scheduled and rescheduled mediation with Smith. Id. at 709. At one point, one of the parties tried to attend the mediation, only to discover the session had been cancelled. Id. Additionally, one of the two cases was dismissed for lack of prosecution. Id. at 709–10. The opinion is unclear whether the parties actually mediated with Smith as the mediator. Id. at 710.
169 Id.
170 Id. (“Regarding the objection to Judge O’Reilly, the court said, ‘The arbitrator mediated the child custody issues, nothing dealing with property. As far as the Court is concerned, as far as this Court knows, unless there is some proof otherwise, no property issues have been before this mediator. So this Court’s order to mediate with that arbitrator on those dates will stand.’”).
171 Id. at 710–11 (noting the court of appeals reviews this type of motion to determine if the court below abused its discretion in making its rulings).
172 Id. at 712–13 (“We hold that the parties . . . agreed to binding arbitration” and “ . . . that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in appointing an arbitrator other than [Smith].”). These difficulties included the delay tactics of all parties and their counsel as well as the unavailability of arbitrator Smith. See id. at 712–13.
173 Id. at 713 (The husband sought disqualification because Judge O’Reilly may have learned confidential information in their previous mediation years prior to the conflict at issue in the case.)
Texas law, mediation communications are strictly confidential.\textsuperscript{175} The court noted: “Just as it would be improper for a mediator to disclose any confidential information to another arbitrator of the parties’ dispute, it is also improper for the mediator to act as the arbitrator in the same or a related dispute without the express consent of the parties.”\textsuperscript{176} The court of appeals held that the appointment of Judge O’Reilly was an abuse of discretion.\textsuperscript{177} At the time that Judge O’Reilly mediated the case, the parties did not know that she might later serve as their arbitrator,\textsuperscript{178} and the parties might have acted differently in the mediation if they knew Judge O’Reilly would wear multiple hats in the dispute-resolution procedure.\textsuperscript{179} Thus, without the express consent of both parties, the district court could not appoint Judge O’Reilly to act as arbitrator.\textsuperscript{180} Presumably, the court would have conducted a different analysis if the litigation had involved mediator/arbitrator Smith, whom the parties had already agreed would make a suitable neutral for both procedures.\textsuperscript{181} Later Texas cases, however, following Cartwright, specifically approve of the use of same-neutral med-arb if the parties expressly contracted for the procedure.\textsuperscript{182}

\textsuperscript{174}Id. (citing TEX. CIV. PRAC. & REM. CODE ANN. § 154.073 (West 2011)).
\textsuperscript{175}TEX. CIV. PRAC. & REM. CODE ANN. § 154.073(c) (West 2011). Other states have similar statutes. See, e.g., COLO. REV. STAT. ANN. § 13-22-307 (West 2005); IOWA CODE ANN. § 679C.106 (West Supp. 2010); MONT. CODE ANN. § 26-1-813 (2011); VA. CODE ANN. § 8.01-576.10 (West 2007).
\textsuperscript{176}In re Cartwright, 104 S.W.3d at 714.
\textsuperscript{177}Id.
\textsuperscript{178}Id.
\textsuperscript{179}Id.; see also In re E.B.L.G., No. 14-06-01095-CV, 2009 WL 3126406, at *4 (Tex. App.—Houston [14th Dist.] Sept. 29, 2009, no pet.) (mem. op.) (distinguishing the case from In re Cartwright because the court did not order the same neutral to serve as both mediator and arbitrator).
\textsuperscript{180}In re Cartwright, 104 S.W.3d at 714.
\textsuperscript{181}Id. Although the parties specifically agreed to the neutral that they wanted to proceed over later disputes, the decision does not indicate if the divorce decree specifically addressed how mediation communications could be used in later arbitration proceedings. See id. at 711.
D. Township of Aberdeen v. Patrolmen’s Benevolent Association, Local 163—Disapproving of Mediator Reliance on Arbitration Awards

Similar to the other cases outlined above (and Bowden in particular), the Superior Court of New Jersey held that mediation communications cannot form the basis for an arbitration award. The case involved a dispute between the Township of Aberdeen and the union representing police officers over a contract extension when the current collective bargaining agreement was set to expire. The parties were set to begin arbitration, but the arbitrator suggested mediation first, to which the parties agreed. The dispute largely centered on pay for existing officers and the number of hours per week each officer could work. After the mediation reached an impasse, the parties engaged in a substantial and protracted arbitration hearing.

The arbitrator’s decision made clear that the neutral had considered mediation statements not also presented during the arbitration. In the award, the arbitrator “made repeated references to information received and statements made during the mediation process. None of these references was grounded in the evidence presented at the arbitration hearings. The arbitrator also described in great detail the Township’s shifting positions during the mediation process.” The court found that the arbitrator erred in giving weight to mediation evidence that was not part of the arbitration hearing.

184 Id. at 291. As noted above, med-arb has traditionally been utilized in collective bargaining situations for emergency workers to avoid the possibility of impasse and a work stoppage in such an important area of public safety. See supra note 45 and accompanying text.
185 Twp. of Aberdeen, 669 A.2d at 291–92. This is another parallel to the Bowden case, in which the arbitrator first suggests that the parties engage in mediation prior to conducting an arbitration. Compare id., with Bowden v. Weickert, No. S-02-017, 2003 WL 21419175, at *1 (Ohio Ct. App. June 20, 2003). As noted above, parties put in this situation might agree to the procedure primarily out of coercion (such as not wanting to disagree with the potential arbitrator’s suggestion) than out of true, informed consent. See supra note 117.
186 See Twp. of Aberdeen, 669 A.2d at 292.
187 Id.
188 Id.
189 Id.
record, thus allowing himself to be biased against the Township based on tactics employed by the Township during the mediation. ¹⁹⁰

As with the cases discussed above, the court primarily relied on the mediation privilege and the public policy favoring the confidentiality of mediation communications. ¹⁹¹ The court held:

Mediation would be a hollow practice if the parties’ negotiating tactics could be used against them by the arbitrator in rendering the final decision. The parties should feel free to negotiate without fear that what they say and do will later be used against them. While perhaps the analogy is imperfect, it would be unthinkable for a trial court to base its decision on information disclosed in pretrial settlement negotiations. Indeed, evidence of settlement negotiations, including offers of compromise, is generally inadmissible to prove a party’s liability for a claim. Such evidence is excluded because it is not relevant to the question of liability and because its admissibility would discourage parties from attempting to settle claims out of court. Negotiations during the mediation process should be subject to similar protection. To protect the integrity of mediation, N.J.A.C. 19:16–3.4 provides that “[i]nformation disclosed by a party to a mediator . . . shall not be divulged by the mediator voluntarily or by compulsion.” In a similar vein, N.J.A.C. 19:16–5.7(c) states that “[i]nformation disclosed by a party to an arbitrator while functioning in a mediatory capacity shall not be divulged by the arbitrator voluntarily or by compulsion.” While these regulations are not directly on point, they are further evidence of the strong public interest in protecting the confidentiality of negotiations during mediation so as to ensure the parties to the dispute will feel free to adopt and modify their positions as necessary to reach an agreeable settlement. Permitting arbitrators to use such changes in position in the course of rendering a ¹⁹⁰ Id. at 293–94.

¹⁹¹ Id. at 294.
final arbitration award undermines this sense of freedom that the regulations were designed to encourage.\footnote{Id. (citations omitted) (emphasis added).}

As with the other cases discussed above, policy dictates that mediation communications not be used in the arbitration setting, presumably, unless the parties agree that they may do so.\footnote{See id. (noting the strong public interest in protecting the confidentiality of mediation negotiations so the parties will “feel free to adopt and modify their positions as necessary to reach an agreeable settlement”).}

E. These Cases Demonstrate How Mediation Confidentiality Applies to Med-Arb Procedures

These cases show that issues relating to confidentiality in med-arb usually arise in the context of med-arb procedures that do not adequately provide in advance for confidentiality and informed consent.\footnote{Bowden v. Weickert, No. S-02-017, 2003 WL 21419175 (Ohio Ct. App. June 20, 2003); In re Cartwright, 104 S.W.3d 706, 714 (Tex. App.—Houston [1st Dist.] 2003, no pet.); Town of Clinton v. Geological Servs. Corp., No. 04-0462A, 2006 WL 3246464 (Mass. Super. Nov. 8, 2006); Twp. of Aberdeen v. Patrolmen’s Benevolent Ass’n, Local 163, 669 A.2d 291 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 1996).} Both Bowden and Cartwright contain procedural irregularities making these cases a bit extraordinary.\footnote{See Bowden, 2006 WL 21419175, at *1; In re Cartwright, 104 S.W.3d at 708, 710.} In Bowden, the parties originally agreed to arbitrate, but the arbitrator convinced the parties to try mediating the case with him, instead.\footnote{2006 WL 21419175, at *1. The court does not say exactly how the parties arrived at mediation, rather than arbitration. It does note, “The arbitrator, however, instead of proceeding to arbitration, attempted to mediate the dispute.” Id.} They did not explicitly contract for med-arb services, and the only written agreement between the parties contained an arbitration clause.\footnote{Id.; see also Wright v. Brockett, 150 Misc. 2d 1031, 1036, 1040 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. 1991) (finding no proof of consent that the parties agreed to an arbitration portion of med-arb and therefore refusing to enforce a settlement as an arbitration award).} In Cartwright, the parties did agree in writing to the med-arb procedure, but the neutral they selected later became unavailable.\footnote{104 S.W.3d at 708, 710.} The court of appeals in the latter case was willing to enforce the parties’ agreement to use med-arb, but the problem concerned the selection of the neutral, not the selection of the process.\footnote{Id. at 711, 713–14.} Thus, these cases may not dictate the outcome of future disputes arising in med-arb, especially if the cases had proceeded according to contract.\textsuperscript{200} The \textit{Town of Clinton} case involved an agreement to engage in med-arb, but the dispute in court involved parties that were not part of the med-arb procedure.\textsuperscript{201} The \textit{Township of Aberdeen} case involved, arguably, the most “classic” med-arb situation, and the court still found that the arbitrator should not have used mediation communications in the subsequent arbitration.\textsuperscript{202}

These cases teach that courts can (and do) rely on state statutes, court rules, and even public policy dealing with mediation confidentiality to protect mediation communications from being disclosed later, in the absence of any agreement allowing the use of such information. In \textit{Bowden}, the court determined such disclosure actually occurred,\textsuperscript{203} while the \textit{Cartwright} court recognized the possibility of such disclosures and did not require the parties to proceed in med-arb with the court-selected neutral.\textsuperscript{204} The \textit{Town of Clinton} court did not allow any discovery of another parties’ mediation communications,\textsuperscript{205} and the \textit{Township of Aberdeen} court relied on statutes and public policy in its decision.\textsuperscript{206}

Although some states have blanket prohibitions against disclosure of statements in mediation,\textsuperscript{207} not all states do.\textsuperscript{208} Other courts might not have been as willing to look to broader policies, especially if the parties agree to use a med-arb procedure in the first place. Therefore, any of these cases may have turned out differently had the parties lived in a state lacking these protections.

\textsuperscript{202} \textit{Twp. of Aberdeen v. Patrolmen’s Benevolent Ass’n, Local 163, 669 A.2d 291, 294 (N.J. Super. Ct. App. Div. 1996)} (stating that “[m]ediation would be a hollow practice if the parties’ negotiating tactics could be used against them by the arbitrator in rendering the final decision”).
\textsuperscript{204} \textit{104 S.W.3d at 714–15}.
\textsuperscript{205} \textit{2006 WL 3246464, at *3}.
\textsuperscript{206} \textit{669 A.2d at 294}.
\textsuperscript{207} \textit{See supra} note 82 and Section IV.B.
\textsuperscript{208} \textit{See, e.g.,} \textit{OHIO REV. CODE ANN. § 2710.03} (LexisNexis 2008) (providing that a mediation communication can be subject to discovery or admissible as evidence if there is a waiver or if certain requirements are met).
Even if the parties are in a state with a general protection of mediation communications, the mediation protection may still be waived. Indeed, if such confidentiality or privilege were absolute and unable to be waived, the parties would not be able to freely engage in the med-arb process. In stressing the need for informed consent, the courts in the decisions cited above recognized the limits of confidentiality and the contracting parties’ freedom to choose an appropriate method of dispute resolution to meet the needs of the parties. For instance, the Bowden court established a three-part test to determine whether proper informed consent was given. No matter the applicable law in the relevant jurisdiction, if parties are intent on using same-neutral med-arb, they should clearly contract for the procedure, and the contract should explicitly waive confidentiality. Without such careful planning and drafting, the parties may participate in a procedure only to have resulting arbitration agreements vacated under the Federal Arbitration Act.

---

210 See id. at *2 (citing Kirtley, supra note 159 at 8).
211 Bowden v. Weickert, No. S-02-017, 2003 WL 21419175, at *6 (Ohio Ct. App. June 20, 2003) ("[G]iven the confidential nature of mediation, the high degree of deference enjoyed by an arbitrator, and the high probability that both proceedings are likely to be employed before their disputes are resolved, it is essential that the parties agree to certain ground rules at the outset. At a minimum, the record must include clear evidence that the parties have agreed to engage in a med-arb process, by allowing a court-appointed arbitrator to function as the mediator of their dispute."); In re Cartwright, 104 S.W.3d 706, 714 (Tex. App.—Houston [1st Dist.] 2003, no pet.) (partially granting the writ because the parties, when they first mediated a case before Judge O’Reilly, did not “make informed decisions” about their disclosures in that mediation such to assume they would consent to her using such knowledge in a subsequent med-arb proceeding).
212 See supra note 145 and accompanying text.
213 See Phillips, Same Neutral Med-Arb, supra note 7, at 30–31. Gerald Phillips recommends the neutral explain the benefits and drawbacks of the med-arb process to the parties, including the difficulties of confidentiality and other ethical problems that may arise. Id. After these issues are explained, Phillips recommends the parties give informed consent in writing. Id. As a sample waiver, Phillips suggests using language such as that found in the California ADR Practice Guide: “The parties understand that this process will likely cause the arbitrator to receive information that might not otherwise have been received as evidence in the arbitration and to receive information confidentially from each of the parties that may not be disclosed to the other side.” Id. at 31. Additionally, the waiver should have the “parties acknowledge that the arbitrator might be influenced by confidential information learned in the mediation and sign a waiver giving up the right to disqualify the arbitrator and vacate the award on account of this.” Id.
VI. IN LIGHT OF COMPREHENSIVE CONFIDENTIALITY LAWS, PARTIES’ INFORMED CONSENT TO PARTICIPATE IN MED-ARB MUST BE REFLECTED IN WRITING

As shown above, med-arb offers participants benefits that are simply unavailable with many other dispute-resolution options. Parties who want to take advantage of these benefits should be able to do so. Although the med-arb procedure has not been specifically endorsed in any one court opinion, the courts appear to be hospitable to the parties’ choice of using this procedure, provided that the parties consent not only to the procedure but also to the use of the mediation communications in the later arbitration.

First and foremost, the intent should be the intent of the parties, as opposed to the intent of the neutral or any third-party. The parties’ intent

---

215 See supra Part III.
217 The Institute of Christian Conciliation has a med-arb rule that specifically allows the use of the same neutral, provided that both parties agree:

D. When a transition pursuant to this Rule occurs, an entirely new panel of arbitrators shall be appointed pursuant to Rule 10, unless the parties agree otherwise. By unanimous written agreement, either before or after the mediation stage, the parties may agree to use the same conciliators in both mediation and arbitration. By such unanimous agreement, the parties agree that the arbitrators may consider any information they received during mediation as though it were received during arbitration, in full compliance with the Arbitration Rules.

E. Whenever mediators are authorized to act as arbitrators pursuant to this Rule, the parties, after signing the appropriate documents, may either: (1) summarize the information that was received during mediation, make closing statements, and then rest their cases; or (2) proceed to offer new information pursuant to the Arbitration Rules.

F. Whenever new arbitrators are appointed pursuant to this Rule, the arbitrators may not call the previous mediators as witnesses without the unanimous agreement of the parties and the mediators.

should encompass at least two things. First, the parties should express their intent, in writing, to participate in the med-arb procedure with the same neutral serving in both capacities. In addition, the parties should also

Case Study] (“The parties urged the neutral to be the mediator and arbitrator. They offered to execute the necessary stipulation to permit the neutral to be both. The dispute was resolved in the mediation part of the med-arb.”); Bartel, supra note 2, at 689 (“Ensuring that med-arb as a distinct dispute resolution process is voluntarily chosen and agreed to by the parties minimizes its disadvantages.”). In Bartel’s article, he concluded:

Recognizing the power of the med-arbitrator and the potential for abuse of that power, the parties should consider carefully whether med-arb is the appropriate choice to resolve their dispute. When the parties are able to choose a med-arbitrator whose style and skill they know and respect, or when the parties are willing to take their chances on a particular dispute with someone they are not as familiar with, med-arb can be the best choice. Without this understanding and voluntary choice, the process may do more harm than good.

Id. at 691.

218 See Phillips, Same-Neutral Med-Arb, supra note 7, at 30–31. Of course, if the parties choose to use different neutrals in the med-arb procedure, they can elect to do so. See Zach, supra note 63, at 36. For parties who believe same-neutral med-arb would inevitably result in a breach of confidential information, they may wish to employ med-arb but use different neutrals for the mediation and arbitration proceedings. Id. This could also be a viable alternative for parties who would feel too uncomfortable to speak in the mediation because they fear the mediator-turned-arbitrator would later use those statements to that party’s disadvantage when crafting an award. See id. (“[W]hen the arbitrator and the mediator are the same person, there is a fear that this individual will be unable to erase from memory matters disclosed in confidence . . . .”). Different-neutral med-arb would maintain the benefit of finality without potentially sacrificing the confidentiality of mediation. The biggest drawback to this procedure is the need to initiate an entirely new arbitration proceeding following a failed mediation. See id. at 37–38. The parties, then, would have to educate the arbitrator as to the merits of the dispute. Id. at 36. Because the arbitrator is not familiar with the case, the parties would be required to spend time and money bringing the new neutral up to speed, essentially arguing their case a second time. Id. at 37. Individual parties considering med-arb should balance the possibility of breached confidentiality with the speed and efficiency associated with same-neutral med-arb before deciding how to proceed. See id. at 38 (“Arb-med may take more time than the other options. But compared to . . . the present system, the time consumed by putting mediation after . . . arbitration may be a wash.”). Additionally, different-neutral med-arb does not have the same flexibility as same-neutral med-arb. See id. As noted above, a neutral engaged in same-neutral med-arb can switch back and forth between mediation and arbitration depending on the circumstances of the dispute and the needs of the parties. See supra notes 38–41 and accompanying text. However, if the arbitrator is a person other than the mediator, such transitions are less likely, if not impossible. See Bartel, supra note 2, at 666; see also Blankenship, supra note 63, at 31 (“Med-arb-diff, however, is more costly and time consuming and it forecloses further attempts to mediate once the process reaches arbitration.”). Because the arbitrator would be unfamiliar with the parties’ attempts and progress specify in their contract how they want mediation communications to be treated if the neutral must render an arbitration award. 219

Entertainment neutral and med-arb specialist Gerald Phillips recounts a recent contract for med-arb crafted between himself and the parties. 220 The parties originally approached Phillips with a stipulation encompassing that the parties would engage in a med-arb procedure conducted by Phillips. 221 Essentially, the original situation only encompassed the parties’ intent to conduct a med-arb process. 222 Having received the parties’ stipulation, Phillips suggested his own stipulation, including the following language:

8. The Parties acknowledge that [Phillips] has advised them that during the mediation process they and their counsel may and most likely will disclose to him, while acting as the Mediator, their respective settlement positions, their theories of the case, the alleged strengths and weaknesses of their respective positions and matters which may not be admissible during the arbitration; and if he is to perform both functions he will, if the case is not settled, hear testimony, and will ultimately rule in the case.

... during mediation, it is unlikely the neutral would be comfortable switching to mediation once the dispute has reached the arbitration stage. Additionally, the arbitrator may not be as skilled as a mediator and may not be able to offer those services even if the parties would like to revert back to the mediation process.

Still other variations on the med-arb process could be used by the parties. For instance, one variation involves the outgoing mediator making a recommendation to the incoming arbitrator as to how the mediator would have resolved the dispute. See Blankenship, supra note 63, at 31 (“This process is identical to med-arb-diff except that should the participants fail to reach a voluntary agreement during the mediation phase, the mediator submits a recommendation to the arbitrator. It is suggested that the arbitrator usually follows the recommendation.”). Another option is known as “co-med-arb” in which the mediator and arbitrator are separate neutrals who jointly oversee a factual presentation by the parties. Id. Following the factual presentation, the parties engage in mediation with the mediator and then arbitration, if necessary, with the arbitrator. Id. This process has the benefit of no potential disclosure of confidential information as well as any potential bias on the part of the neutral; though, it does have the added expense of an additional neutral and the perhaps needless presentation of a formal fact-gather session if the dispute resolves during the mediation phase. See id.

219 Phillips, A Case Study, supra note 217, at 69–70.
220 Id.
221 Id.
222 See id. at 68–69.
9. The Parties agree that [Phillips] may undertake the role both of Mediator and Arbitrator, and the Parties, by and through their attorneys forever, waive and relinquish any claim or objection to his service in both capacities. The Parties waive any claim they may have of prejudice resulting from Arbitrator undertaking to act in both capacities as a Mediator and as the Arbitrator, and waive any conflict or impropriety in this regard.

10. The Parties agree that they will not challenge the determination, outcome and decision of the Arbitrator on the basis that they have requested the Arbitrator to act as both the Mediator and Arbitrator in this matter.

Again, this stipulation evidences the parties’ intent to engage in the med-arb procedure in front of Phillips, and it even acknowledges that Phillips might hear statements in the mediation that would not be considered “evidence” in the arbitration portion. However, even this stipulation does not discuss whether those mediation communications would remain confidential or if they could be used in the arbitration phase. Immediately prior to the mediation, Phillips asked the parties to sign a stipulation that would allow him to render an arbitration award based on mediation communications. In his opening statement, he also advised the parties that information learned in caucus “may influence the arbitrator in the award he will

---

223 Id. at 69.
224 See id.
225 See id.
226 That stipulation provided:

It has been agreed by the Parties that [the author] acting as a mediator will endeavor to help the Parties to resolve this dispute during the morning session on June 16. If no agreement is reached during the morning the parties agree that [the author] will then be the Arbitrator. The parties agree that if he believes he received information, during the morning mediation, sufficient for his making a binding award, the parties agree that he may make such an award. If he determines that there should be a hearing to ascertain the facts which he felt he required, a limited arbitration shall be held. The Parties agree that they will not attack any award due to the fact that the arbitration was cut short in order for the arbitrator to render an award based on the mediation and the curtailed arbitration.

Id.
render.” Although such stipulation suggests that the arbitration award would be rendered by the neutral based on mediation communications, such waiver is not explicit and might not satisfy the Bowden court or other courts who employ a similar test.

A clearer stipulation would have stated whether the confidentiality of mediation communications would or would not be waived in the arbitration portion of med-arb. The stipulation could have done one of two things: (1) expressly stated that the confidentiality afforded mediation communications are waived for the purposes of the arbitration portion of the procedure or (2) expressly retained the confidentiality of mediation communications. For parties who would like the option to have the neutral base an award solely based on the mediation presentations, an express waiver of the confidentiality of the mediation communications should be executed. The best practice is for the parties to enter the waiver at the onset of the med-arb procedure. A waiver at the point at which the procedure changes from a mediation to an arbitration may also evidence the parties’ intent. In any event, if the parties neglect to execute such a waiver at the beginning, then a belated waiver is better than no waiver at all.

If the parties choose to maintain the confidentiality of the mediation communications, they should execute a contract similarly expressing their intent to maintain the confidentiality. Parties who wish to maintain the confidentiality of the mediation communications will have to rely on the ability of the neutral (whom they presumably chose) to be able to disregard mediation communications, particularly caucus communications, if any, that the parties divulged during the process. In this situation, the mediator could have transferred the confidentiality that the parties had entered into with the mediator to the neutral.

---

227 Id. at 69–70 (“The parties have agreed that they will in no way challenge the proceedings because the neutral may have used some confidential information in the award or that he held private caucuses where he was a party to ex-parte communications.”). Ultimately, Phillips settled the entertainment dispute in the mediation portion of the med-arb. Id. at 71. He attributes the settlement, in part, to a position that he took that he would not give the parties an evaluation of the case, which could have been perceived by the parties as a preview of a potential arbitration award. Id. He noted that his restraint from giving an evaluation heightened the parties’ trust in him, especially when he sought to generate options and help the parties find creative solutions to their dispute. See id. at 70–71.

228 See id. at 69–70; see also Phillips, Same-Neutral Med-Arb, supra note 7, at 31.

229 See, e.g., Town of Clinton v. Geological Servs. Corp., No. 04-0462A, 2006 WL 3246464, at *2 (Mass. Super. Nov. 8, 2006). If the parties do not execute the waiver until the middle of the med-arb procedure, the waiver may later be susceptible to a challenge on the basis of duress or a similar defense.

would be similar to a judge or jury asked to disregard certain evidence in a trial.\textsuperscript{231} Although parties may have legitimate reasons for choosing to maintain the confidentiality of mediation communications, those parties must be aware that the later arbitration would require a full presentation in front of the arbitrator, even if that presentation is largely duplicative of the information discussed during the mediation.\textsuperscript{232} Whether the parties choose to waive or maintain the confidentiality of mediation communications is a decision for the parties; this Article suggests that no matter the intent of the parties, such intent be reduced to writing, preferably, prior to the beginning of the med-arb procedure.

VII. CONCLUSION

As demonstrated above, med-arb can be a useful procedure for parties who look to combine the twin benefits of flexibility and finality in an ADR procedure. Parties and neutrals who wish to engage in this procedure, however, should be careful to execute detailed contracts expressing the parties’ wish to engage in med-arb and expressing what mediation communications, if any, can be considered for the purpose of the arbitration award. Without this type of explicit disclosure, any award resulting from the med-arb procedure may be subject to vacatur under the Federal Arbitration Act or comparable state statutes. Without such explicit waivers, the med-arb procedure would ironically be subject to post-arbitration litigation, threatening the finality of the process so deliberately chosen.

Although the level of confidentiality afforded to mediation statements should be the choice of the parties, a recommended approach would be for the parties to waive confidentiality with respect to anything said in the joint sessions, at a minimum. If the neutral cannot rely on any statements made in the joint sessions and the parties are required to make a complete presentation of evidence in arbitration, then many of the efficiencies of med-arb have been squandered by the parties. Whether the parties should also waive confidentiality afforded to mediation communications made in caucus is a more difficult decision. If the parties expect the mediation portion of the med-arb to be conducted primarily by caucus, they might want to waive confidentiality with respect to the entire proceeding, or else \textsuperscript{231} See \textit{supra} note 76.

\textsuperscript{232} Perhaps another option would be for the parties to explicitly waive the confidentiality of mediation communications made in joint session while maintaining the confidentiality of mediation communications made in caucus.
they will be required to put on an extensive arbitration hearing. If the parties participate primarily in joint session in mediation, then they likely can present a sufficient “case” if the dispute does not settle and the parties must arbitrate the dispute.

Ultimately, the question may be presented as such: how much confidentiality do the parties need so that they are not required to start anew at the arbitration hearing? An imperfect solution may be to waive all confidentiality in a “shuttle diplomacy” mediation but only the joint session communications in a mediation involving primarily joint sessions. This recommendation is simply an imperfect starting point, and the parties in each individual situation should carefully assess what information they would like to remain confidential and what information would make the arbitration process more streamlined. Giving thoughtful consideration to this question will assist the parties in creating a streamlined procedure that still protects the confidentiality of sensitive information.