1995

NF95-227 Intestate Succession in Farming and Ranching

Paul H. Gessaman

J. David Aiken
University of Nebraska--Lincoln, daiken@unl.edu

Follow this and additional works at: http://digitalcommons.unl.edu/ardnews
Part of the Agriculture Commons, and the Curriculum and Instruction Commons

http://digitalcommons.unl.edu/ardnews/334

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by the Agricultural Research Division of IANR at DigitalCommons@University of Nebraska - Lincoln. It has been accepted for inclusion in Agricultural Research Division News & Annual Reports by an authorized administrator of DigitalCommons@University of Nebraska - Lincoln.
Intestate Succession in Farming and Ranching

Paul H. Gessaman, Extension Economist,
J. David Aiken, Water & Agricultural Law Specialist

This is one in a series of NebFacts providing information on farm and ranch estate planning. Titles in the series are listed at the end. Reading the documents in this series will improve your understanding of estate planning tools and alternatives and make it easier to communicate with your attorney, accountant, and other helpers when your estate plan is prepared.

Your need for legal and tax advice: While the information contained in this document is thought to be accurate, it should not be used as a substitute for legal advice on matters related to business organization, taxation, estate planning, or other business and financial management matters. Consult with your legal and tax advisers before making decisions.

What happens if you die without a will? If you have property held in single ownership (often called fee simple ownership) and you die without leaving a valid will, succession of ownership of your estate will occur under the laws of intestate succession. If you have prepared a will and it is successfully contested, the laws of intestate succession will determine succession of ownership of your property. In either case, intestate means that you died without leaving instructions (a will) that the probate court finds acceptable as a guide for the probate of your estate.

The process by which your estate will be identified, valued, estate tax determined and paid, and title to your property transferred to your heirs is called Probate. (See NF 95-234, Probate In Nebraska: The Probate Process.) Probate under intestate succession is directed by the court, and the distribution of your estate to heirs occurs by court order. The probate process is started by a petition to the court that asks for appointment of an administrator of your estate and a ruling that the probate of your estate be carried out as an intestate succession. In the typical situation, this petition is filed by an attorney retained for that purpose by a closely related survivor or a friend, or by your personal attorney.

When the laws of intestate succession determine who will inherit and in what proportions each will inherit, only by chance will the distribution of your estate be what you would have preferred. The duty of the court will be to carry out the statutory instructions for disposal of your property, and it is not allowed to make exceptions even when relatives or friends know what the intestate deceased wanted to have done with his or her property.
Rules for intestate succession are:

- If a spouse and children or grandchildren survive: The spouse receives the first $50,000 of the estate value, the balance is divided one-half to the spouse and remaining half is evenly divided among the children with the share of any child who is deceased being evenly divided among his or her children, if any.
- If a spouse and the parents of the deceased survive (no surviving children): the spouse receives the first $50,000 of the estate value, the balance is divided one-half to the spouse and one half to the parents of the deceased.
- If only the spouse survives: the spouse receives the entire estate.
- If only children or grandchildren survive: the surviving children receive equal shares of the estate with the share of a deceased child being equally divided among his/her children, if any.
- If only relatives other than children and grandchildren survive: the surviving blood relatives receive the estate in accordance with distribution instructions contained in the statutes. (Those instructions are not described in this document.)
- If no surviving relatives, the estate escheats (goes to) the state.

Intestate succession provides no flexibility in the distribution of assets from the estate of the deceased. While this may be a suitable approach for the person with a very small estate and/or for the person with one or very few living relatives, intestate succession is not recommended. When the estate is sizeable, and/or where there are several to many surviving relatives, and/or where death or divorce and remarriage have modified and enlarged the pattern of family relationships, intestate succession may result in outcomes (i.e. ownership patterns, estate tax liabilities, etc.) that the survivors find very difficult to accept.

When intestate succession occurs as a result of successful contest of a will, the contest is initiated by a person who can expect to inherit more under intestate succession than under an existing will. A will contest usually is very damaging to family relationships, and often is very costly for the estate and for all survivors.

The expenses and problems of intestate succession can be avoided if you prepare and have in a location known to survivors, a complete, up-to-date, and valid will.

Glossary:

Administrator-- An individual or entity such as a trust department of a bank appointed to handle the affairs of a person who has died without leaving a will.

Escheat -- Assignment of property to the state because there is no verifiable legal owner.

Estate-- Everything of value (all property) that a person owns while living or at the time of death.

Heir-- A person entitled by law to inherit part or all of the estate of an ancestor who died without leaving a valid will.

Probate -- A court procedure for settling the personal and business affairs of a decedent by formally proving the validity of a will and establishing the legal transfer of property to beneficiaries, or appointing an administrator and supervising the legal transfer of property to heirs if there is no valid will.

Will -- A person's declaration of desires for disposal of his or her property after death.