9-1986

CC329 Goals for Business Operations and Family Life Part IIIc : Identifying Goals for the Manufacturer

Paul H. Gessaman

Follow this and additional works at: http://digitalcommons.unl.edu/extensionhist

http://digitalcommons.unl.edu/extensionhist/3337

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by the Extension at DigitalCommons@University of Nebraska - Lincoln. It has been accepted for inclusion in Historical Materials from University of Nebraska-Lincoln Extension by an authorized administrator of DigitalCommons@University of Nebraska - Lincoln.
GOALS FOR BUSINESS OPERATIONS AND FAMILY LIFE

PART IIIc: IDENTIFYING GOALS FOR THE MANUFACTURER

by Paul H. Gessaman
Extension Agricultural Finance Economist
GOALS FOR BUSINESS OPERATIONS AND FAMILY LIFE

PART IIIc: IDENTIFYING GOALS FOR THE MANUFACTURER

by Paul H. Gessaman
Extension Agricultural Finance Economist

This document is for use by persons and families who operate businesses that transform raw materials into products that others purchase and use (construction contractors, manufacturers, and similar firms). Other versions of this document are available for those who operate retail stores, and for those who provide services (plumbers, electricians, attorneys, etc.). If this is not the correct version for you, ask your workshop leader for a copy of one that's more appropriate.

INTRODUCTION

Imagine that you are on an airplane that has just taken off from Honolulu for a non-stop flight to the mainland. What would you think if this announcement came over the intercom:

Ladies and gentlemen, this is your captain speaking. As you know, we just left Honolulu and now we're traveling east across the Pacific Ocean. If all goes well, in a few hours we should be able to look down and see land below us. If we do, we'll hunt for a city. If the city we find has an airport that's large enough, we'll land and find out where we are. Then, we'll decide where we want to go on the next leg of this flight. Meanwhile, folks, just sit back, relax, and enjoy the flight. The jet stream is behind us today, and we'll soon be traveling more than 550 miles per hour.

Would you want to ride on that airplane? How confident would you be that you would arrive safely and on-time? Would you wonder what you gained by traveling more than 550 miles per hour when you didn't know your destination?

Do you and your family ever feel that your life is going by at 550 miles per hour, but you don't know where you're going? As a family, are you members of the "Non-directed Business Ratrace?" If so, you may be like our fictional airplane and pilot. You may be moving fast, making a loud noise, but uncertain of your destination, and without a place to land.

If you want to be effective managers of business and family life activities, you need to know WHERE you are going, HOW you intend to get there, and WHEN you intend to arrive. These insights come directly from your goals — your statements of the things you want to achieve in life.
If you and your family have never identified your goals — or if you've identified your goals, but don't know how to attain them, you are not alone. Most people hope for a better future, but few identify goals that describe the future they want. And, even fewer consistently manage for goal attainment. To help you be a better manager, this series of documents provides a means and a method that you can use when identifying goals, setting priorities, and developing a goal-directed management plan.

IDENTIFYING GOALS FOR BUSINESS OPERATIONS AND FAMILY LIFE

Many of your interests and sources of motivation, and those of other family members, were identified when you responded to the self-assessment questions. You've summarized those insights in your Interest and Preference Statements. In doing so, it's likely that you identified life situations and conditions of living that are of special interest. (If you've not completed the self-assessment, please do so before going on with this document.) As you identify goals, use insights from your self-assessment to help you focus on aspects of life that are of special importance, and those where you excell.

Be sure to identify goals that reflect the full range of interests within the family unit. Start by identifying the full range of goals that family members would like to achieve. Don't be surprised or concerned if goal conflicts are evident. Such is the case for most businesses and families. Initially, ignore the conflicts and concentrate on identifying goals that describe the future that you and your family would like to see come to pass.

Goal conflicts will be dealt with later through priority-setting. In priority-setting you'll examine your high-ranked goals and set priorities that "narrow down" your efforts so you can concentrate resources on attainment of your most important and/or urgent goals.

Guidelines for Goal Identification:

All of us have goals that we work toward over many years — goals such as business profitability, "burning" the mortgage on the family home, or securing a particular form of recognition. Some goals will require a lifetime to attain. Others can be attained in a year, a few years, or a decade. Goals that will be attained over many years are called long-term goals. Those that can be rapidly attained usually are called short-term goals.*

Short-term goals identify things that are to be achieved this year and next -- such as adding a new product (or product line), attaining a certain level of efficiency, learning to use new computer software, remodeling the family home, buying a new car, completing a sales campaign targeted on a new customer, or starting goal-directed management of work and family life.

To the extent possible, one seeks to have short-term goals that directly support attainment of long-term goals. When this is true, the stage is set for more effective management. But, it's rare when all short-term goals

---

* Short-term goals often are referred to as objectives. For simplicity, this discussion uses only the short-term goal and long-term goal terminology.
directly support attainment of long-term goals. And, business goals may be somewhat in conflict with important family life goals. So, at this point don't worry about inconsistencies and conflicts among the goals you identify. Those will be dealt with later. For now, the important thing is to identify goals that represent your interests, hopes, and aspirations for life.

When writing goal statements, be sure to observe these guidelines:

--- Goals are written as action statements. "To complete . . .," or "To earn . . .," or other action statement introduces a typical goal.

--- Long-term goals usually specify the time by which the goal is to be attained. "To pay off the home mortgage by . . ."

--- When long-term goals do not specify a time dimension, they usually refer to qualitative aspects of life. "To ensure that my customers can count on being dealt with honestly by . . ."

--- Long-term goals should be believable in that they should describe situations or conditions that you can believe in over the years. Avoid "pie-in-the-sky" long-term goals that you can't believe in. They will lead to disappointment.

--- Short-term goals have a time dimension that indicates when the goal is to be attained. "To make __________________ available to my customers by __________________, 19_____."

--- Short-term goals should be attainable in that they should describe situations that you can rationally believe are possible to attain (achieve) in the designated time. Avoid short-term goals that you know cannot be attained, as they will cause continuing discouragement.

As you write goal statements you are expressing your hopes and dreams and ambitions for the future by identifying what you want to attain, how you intend to attain, and when you intend to attain each desired outcome. In terms of our fictional airplane and pilot, you are preparing your flight plan.

* * * * * * * * * * * *

IDENTIFYING LONG-TERM BUSINESS GOALS

The approach used here parallels that used in the self-assessment. Each person should initially complete this section without discussion. After you and other workshop participants have completed your initial goal identification, there will be a time for sharing and discussion. You and your family members and/or business associate(s) will have time to share and discuss your initial goal statements.

To the extent that it is feasible to do so, base your goal statements on the insights gained from completing the Part II self-assessment. Identify goals that will build on and use your interests, motivations, and abilities as identified in the self-assessment.

Remember, you are identifying LONG-TERM BUSINESS GOALS.
directly support attainment of long-term goals. And, business goals may be somewhat in conflict with important family life goals. So, at this point don't worry about inconsistencies and conflicts among the goals you identify. Those will be dealt with later. For now, the important thing is to identify goals that represent your interests, hopes, and aspirations for life.

When writing goal statements, be sure to observe these guidelines:

-- Goals are written as action statements. "To complete . . .," or "To earn . . .," or other action statement introduces a typical goal.

-- Long-term goals usually specify the time by which the goal is to be attained. "To pay off the home mortgage by . . ."

-- When long-term goals do not specify a time dimension, they usually refer to qualitative aspects of life. "To ensure that my customers can count on being dealt with honestly by . . ."

-- Long-term goals should be believable in that they should describe situations or conditions that you can believe in over the years. Avoid "pie-in-the-sky" long-term goals that you can't believe in. They will lead to disappointment.

-- Short-term goals have a time dimension that indicates when the goal is to be attained. "To make ___________ available to my customers by ___________, 19___.

-- Short-term goals should be attainable in that they should describe situations that you can rationally believe are possible to attain (achieve) in the designated time. Avoid short-term goals that you know cannot be attained, as they will cause continuing discouragement.

As you write goal statements you are expressing your hopes and dreams and ambitions for the future by identifying what you want to attain, how you intend to attain, and when you intend to attain each desired outcome. In terms of our fictional airplane and pilot, you are preparing your flight plan.

* * * * * * * * * * *

IDENTIFYING LONG-TERM BUSINESS GOALS

The approach used here parallels that used in the self-assessment. Each person should initially complete this section without discussion. After you and other workshop participants have completed your initial goal identification, there will be a time for sharing and discussion. You and your family members and/or business associate(s) will have time to share and discuss your initial goal statements.

To the extent that it is feasible to do so, base your goal statements on the insights gained from completing the Part II self-assessment. Identify goals that will build on and use your interests, motivations, and abilities as identified in the self-assessment.

Remember, you are identifying LONG-TERM BUSINESS GOALS.
Over the next five to ten or more years, what do you expect will be your most important long-term business goal?

In that same period, what will be your second most important long-term business goal?

Several statements that might be important long-term goals for a business that constructs or manufactures products for customers are listed below. (Some may be virtually the same as the ones you have written out above.) Place a check mark to the right of each one that you feel is important with respect to your own situation, and is not a goal that you wrote down above. (On some you will need to fill in a blank.) If you have other important goals, add them on the lines at the end of this listing:

- To increase revenues by an average of _____ percent per year over the next decade.
- To move from my present location to a more suitable site in ________________________________.
- To reduce my work load while maintaining revenues at the present level by ____________________.
- To pay down the existing mortgage to _____ percent of its present balance by ____________________ 19 ___.
- To reduce borrowing for business operations by ___ percent during the next decade.
- To expand the number of customers with yearly purchases of $ ________ or more by _____ percent by 19____.
- To find a purchaser for my existing business and goodwill under an arrangement that allows me to continue with part-time responsibility for ____________________________.
Now go back over all the long-term business goals identified thus far — the ones you've written and ones you marked with a check at the right margin. In the blanks at the left margin, assign to each a ranking number reflecting your view of its importance and/or urgency. Put the number "1" beside the one that you think is most important and/or urgent, the number "2" beside the next most important and/or urgent, and so forth.

When you and others in the workshop have completed and ranked your long-term goal statements, there will be a period for discussion and sharing. Join your family members and/or business associate(s), or confidant, in sharing and discussing initial versions of long-term goals. In your discussions during or after the workshop, remember to observe these discussion rules:

— Be open and honest with yourself and one another.
— Resist the temptation to make value judgments about each other's statements or perspectives.
— Don't react until the other person has fully expressed his/her ideas and/or point of view.

As initial versions of goals are shared and ideas and insights are gained, note them in the margins of your goal listing. When you are satisfied that you have "sharpened up" your thinking about long-term business goals, use an additional copy of this document as a "record copy" to enter goal statements and rankings that reflect the best thinking of family members and represent your interests and needs for the future.

* * * * * * * * * * *

IDENTIFYING SHORT-TERM BUSINESS GOALS

Goals to be attained within the next one or two years, are called "short-term goals." They usually contain a measurable element that can be used to determine whether the goal has been attained (achieved). For example, a short-term goal could be, "To increase the dollar value of my flow of customer orders by 20 percent by March of 19__." When the month of March has ended, it's easy to know whether the goal was attained.

As you did previously, start this goal identification process by working individually. To the extent that it is feasible to do so, base your goal statements on insights gained from the Part II self-assessment. Identify short-term goals that will build on and use your interests, motivations, and abilities, and those of family members (as identified in the self-assessment).

Remember, you are identifying SHORT-TERM BUSINESS GOALS.
Over the next one or two years, what do you expect will be your most important short-term business goal?

In that same period, what short-term business goal will be the second most important?

Several statements that might be important short-term business goals are listed below. Use them in the same way as you did the sample listings of long-term goals. Fill in blanks and place a check mark to the right of each one that you feel is important with respect to your business and work. Add other important short-term goals on the lines at the bottom of the page.

___ To keep current in my record-keeping, work activities, and daily monitoring of business operations. ___

___ To expand the number of customers with yearly purchases of at least $ _________ by _______ (number) this year. ___

___ To increase sales by $ _________ in the next twelve months. ___

___ To participate in management update training that will improve my use of the computer for billing and record keeping. ___

___ To work with other businesses in my town on at least two special events (local business promotions) to be held in the next twelve months. ___

___ To reduce labor costs per unit of output by _____ percent by _________________________________. ___

___ To reduce my existing mortgage balance by $ ____ by the end of this calendar year. ___

___ To reduce my backlog of unfinished work for customers and clients by _____ percent in the next six months. ___

___ To renovate and insulate my building so heating costs in winter months will not average more than $_______/month. ___

___

___

___

___

___

___

___

___
Now go back over your list of short-term goals as you've identified them on the previous page -- the ones you wrote down and the ones you marked with a check at the right margin. In the blanks next to the left margin, assign a ranking number reflecting your view of the importance and/or urgency of each. Put the number "1" beside the one that is most important and/or urgent, the number "2" beside the next most important and/or urgent, and so forth.

When you and others in the workshop have completed and ranked your short-term goal statements, there will be a period for discussion and sharing. Join your family members and/or business associate(s), or confidant, in sharing and discussing initial versions of short-term goals. In your discussions during or after the workshop, remember to observe these discussion rules:

-- Be open and honest with yourself and one another.

-- Resist the temptation to make value judgments about each other's statements or perspectives.

-- Don't react until the other person has fully expressed his/her ideas and/or point of view.

As initial versions of goals are shared and ideas and insights become evident, note them in the margins of your goal listing. When you are satisfied that you have "sharpened up" your thinking about short-term business goals, use an additional copy of this document as a "record copy" to enter goal statements and rankings that best represent the interests and needs for the future of your business operation.

* * * * * * * * * *

IDENTIFYING LONG-TERM FAMILY LIFE GOALS

The approach used here parallels that used when identifying long-term business goals. However, in this instance, attention is focused on goals for family life. Family life goals will, of course, interact with your business goals, but should represent your best thinking about the things you want to achieve in family life. Each person should initially complete this section without discussing it with others. When workshop participants have completed their initial goal identification, there will be a time for family sharing and discussion.

To the extent that it is feasible to do so, base your goal statements on the insights gained from completing the Part II self-assessment. Remember that long-term goals can specify attainment at some year in the future, or at a stage of life. They can, and often do, identify qualitative aspects of life that you wish to attain.

Remember, you are identifying LONG-TERM FAMILY LIFE GOALS.
What do you expect will be your most important family life goal for the next five to ten or more years? Record it on these lines.

-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------

What will be your second most important family life goal for those years?

-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------

Several statements that might be important family life goals are listed here. Place a check mark to the right of each one that you feel is important to you and your family, and is not a goal already written down. Other important goals can be added on the lines at the bottom of the page:

____ To maintain a level of living that does not consume (reduce) our net worth.

____ To take at least one vacation per year in which we travel to ____________________________ for a period of ___________ days.

____ To provide donations of money, goods, or time and effort in support of ____________________________ (organization).

____ To ensure that interested family members can participate in continuing education and self-development activities by ____________________________.

____ To provide ______ percent of the costs of higher education for ____________________________.

____ To reduce our home mortgage balance to ________ percent of its present level.

____ To buy a replacement automobile every ________ years.

____ To arrange my work in such a way that I can pursue my interest in ____________________________.

____ To provide for an adequate level of retirement income starting in 19____ by ____________________________.

____ To encourage family members to improve physical appearance and health by regular exercise and good diet.

____ To save and invest at least ______ percent of our income.

-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------
Now go back over all the long-term family life goals that you have identified thus far — the ones you wrote down and ones you marked with a check at the right margin. In the blanks next to the left margin, assign to each a ranking number reflecting your view of its importance and/or urgency. Put the number "1" beside the one that is most important and/or urgent, a "2" beside the next most important and/or urgent, and so forth.

When you and others in the workshop have completed and ranked your long-term goal statements, there will be a period for discussion and sharing. Join your spouse and/or other family members in sharing and discussion of initial versions of long-term family life goals. In your discussions during or after the workshop, remember to observe these discussion rules:

-- Be open and honest with yourself and one another.

-- Resist the temptation to make value judgments about each other's statements or perspectives.

-- Don't react until the other person has fully expressed his/her ideas and/or point of view.

As initial versions of goals are shared and ideas and insights become evident, note them in the margins of your goal listing. When you are satisfied that you have "sharpened up" your thinking about long-term family life goals, use an additional copy of this document as a "record copy" to enter goal statements and rankings that reflect the best thinking of family members and your interests and needs in the future.

* * * * * * * * * * * *

IDENTIFYING SHORT-TERM FAMILY LIFE GOALS

Goals that you hope to achieve within the next one or two years, are commonly called "short-term goals." Short-term goals contain a measurable element that you can use to determine whether you have done what you hoped to do (attained the goal). For example, a short-term goal could be, "To reduce our credit card balance to less than $300 by June 30, 19__." When that June 30th comes, you will be able to look at your credit card balance and know whether you attained your goal.

As you did before, start this goal identification process by working individually. To the extent that it is feasible to do so, base your goal statements on insights gained from the Part II self-assessment. Identify short-term goals that will build on and use your interests, motivations, and abilities as identified in the self-assessment.

Remember, you are identifying SHORT-TERM FAMILY LIFE GOALS.
Over the next one to two years, what will be your most important goal for family life?

__________________________________________________________

__________________________________________________________

What will be your second most important goal for family life during the next one to two years?

__________________________________________________________

__________________________________________________________

Several statements that might be important family life goals are listed here. Place a check mark to the right of each one that will be important for you and your family, and is not a goal that you already have written down. Other important goals can be added on the lines at the bottom of the page:

___ To fully insulate our home this year so it will be more comfortable, and to decrease utility expense.

___ To reduce our short-term debt by at least $_______ per year in each of the next two years

___ To provide financial or other support of ____________ (organization) in the amount of $________ or ____________.

___ To allocate $________ for orthodontic work for ____________

___ To reduce household operating expense by ______ percent per year in each of the next two years.

___ To provide each family member with a "personal allowance" (a specified amount for each time period) that can be used for personal purposes without accounting to anyone.

___ To set up an "emergency fund" that can be used to pay unexpected expenses such as car or home repair costs, uninsured losses, accident damage repairs, or similar costs.

___ To encourage family members to become involved in community activities important to their health, values, or self-image.

___ To set aside at least ______ evenings per week for "family time" and/or for visiting with friends.

__________________________________________________________

__________________________________________________________

__________________________________________________________

__________________________________________________________
Now go back over the short-term family life goals that you have identified thus far -- the ones you wrote down and ones you marked with a check at the right margin. In the blanks next to the left margin, assign to each a ranking number reflecting your view of its importance and/or urgency. Put the number "1" beside the one that is most important and/or urgent, a "2" beside the next most important and/or urgent, and so forth.

When you and others in the workshop have completed and ranked your short-term goal statements, there will be a period for discussion and sharing. Join your spouse and/or other family members in sharing and discussing your initial versions of short-term family life goals. In your discussions during or after the workshop, remember to observe these discussion rules:

--- Be open and honest with yourself and one another.

--- Resist the temptation to make value judgments about each other's statements or perspectives.

--- Don't react until the other person has fully expressed his/her ideas and/or point of view.

As initial versions of goals are shared and ideas and insights become evident, note them in the margins of your goal listing. When you are satisfied that you have "sharpened up" your thinking about short-term family life goals, use an additional copy of this document as a "record copy" to enter goal statements and rankings that reflect the best thinking of family members and your interests and needs in the near future.

THE NEXT STEP

In the next part of the GOALS Process, you and other family members will examine your goals and make decisions about priorities. It's important that the goal statements used when setting priorities are ones reflecting your best thinking about the future you and your family would like to attain. In preparation for the Part IV priority-setting, take at least two occasions prior to the next workshop to consider and discuss your self-assessment results and goal identification activities. If possible, have family discussions at a time when the persons involved are not over-tired and not distracted by other concerns. Discuss, negotiate issues where you differ, compromise wherever possible. By doing so, you'll be better prepared for the priority-setting activities of Part IV.