Foreword

When Professors Dority Baker and Pearlman approached me with the idea of compiling a Faculty Writing Bibliography, I told them that it was an excellent idea, but cautioned them that it wouldn't be as easy as it sounded.

Faculty writing bibliographies are notoriously difficult to compile. The volume of scholarship for any size law faculty can be very large partly due to the large number (some would say disproportionate) of scholarly law journals. The number of journals combined with the fact that faculty are encouraged to write, speak and present papers, both for their own professional development, to earn tenure and for the reputation and prestige of the school also contributes to a very large volume of legal periodical scholarship. The existence of our Law and Psychology and Space Law programs make the complexities of compiling a bibliography for the associated faculty even more difficult. Psychology faculty publish in journals that are outside of our normal experience, are indexed in different indexes and are cited according to rules that are very different from the Blue Book. Faculty associated with the Space Law program publish in many international journals, some in foreign languages!

Another unexpected challenge is that while untenured and recently tenured faculty tend to keep meticulous track of their scholarly output, most senior faculty do not. Reasons vary from faculty member to faculty member, but in general, once faculty have received tenure, outside of annual reports which record scholarship for the year, there is less need to maintain a continuously updated curricula vitae. Gathering information about senior faculty's writings can be problematic when they're asked to remember everything they've ever written. They may have a current vitae, but it may only record “major” works or contributions. From personal experience, I can attest to the fact that the difficulty increases as I get older.

Another challenge that Dority Baker and Pearlman posed for themselves is that they wanted to include all faculty at the University of Nebraska College of Law, past and present. Historical research of this magnitude is fraught with difficulty, owing to the fact that there is no single index that covers law journals and reviews comprehensively.

In conjunction with the bibliography, they also decided to include a list of all visiting and adjunct faculty. Simply compiling a list of all the faculty who taught at the law college over the last 120 years is hard enough, but including visitors and adjunct faculty makes the task an order of magnitude more difficult because these faculty are, by definition, transient and difficult to track down for verification. The good news is that they persevered and we now have a comprehensive list of all faculty that have taught here.

Listing the obstacles overcome in compiling this work should enhance the pride that they feel in their accomplishment and the gratitude that we feel for having such a comprehensive work. Alumni, faculty and the administration of the law college and the University of Nebraska at large can also bask in the evidence of an engaged, productive and active faculty. The final work is several hundred pages long and lists hundreds, if thousands of works. Merely compiling a list from scratch of so many works is long, hard work. As library director at the law college, I can attest to the numbers of hours and hard work that the two authors spent putting together this excellent work. Professors Dority Baker and Pearlman are each possessed of high professional standards and they worked tirelessly to compile an accurate, well formatted testament to a faculty committed to scholarship.

Introduction

The University of Nebraska College of Law has a long and successful history from the founding of a law school at the University of Nebraska in 1891 to the reorganization of the Law College in 1920 through present day. Much of the success of the College of Law is due to the many distinguished faculty members who have taught, documented, and championed the law. While there are a number of articles, stories and memoirs written about the University of Nebraska College of Law, none have included a list of the entire College of Law faculty and their publications. This bibliography attempts to include all faculty members at the College of Law beginning in 1892 through the faculty members of the 2012–2013 academic year.

This project began in May 2012. We began by compiling a list of the entire College of Law faculty. To record faculty members officially attached to the College of Law, we reviewed material in several locations. First, we looked for official publications that list College of Law faculty. These resources were: the Official Bulletin of the University of Nebraska, the Official Bulletin of Nebraska Law, and the Student Bar Association (SBA) Handbook. From these resources, we were able to collect data about the College of Law faculty from 1920–2006. Next, we reviewed College of Law archival material housed at the University of Nebraska–Lincoln (UNL) Libraries, Special Collections at Love Library. The archives staff was able to provide us with material from 1892–1920. Since these official print publications ceased during or before 2006, we retrieved the lists of faculty from 2006 through 2013 from the faculty pages on the College of Law Web site. Finally, we reviewed lists of faculty prepared earlier by Professors Richard Harnsberger and Steven Willborn.

After the names of College of Law faculty members were located and collected, it was time to set boundaries for the bibliography. We included publications from tenure-track law, law library, and law clinical faculty members and visiting faculty members who were at the College of Law for three or more years. Although we did not include the scholarship of faculty members who visited for less than three years or adjunct faculty, we did include a list of those faculty members for historical purposes. We used the Official Bulletin of Nebraska Law and the Nebraska Law Review to determine the identities of these faculty members. Due to limitations in record keeping, we were unable to retrieve a comprehensive list of visiting and adjunct faculty.

We selected three broad categories of scholarship for the bibliography: books and/or book chapters, articles, and other scholarly publications. We attempted to limit this scholarship to published work within the field of study of each faculty member. We also decided to list scholarship throughout each faculty member's career, whether it was published before, after, or during their tenure at the College of Law. After reviewing potential search options, we decided to use WorldCat, Index to Legal Periodicals (including ILP Retro), and HeinOnline to conduct our searches.

Each faculty entry includes brief biographical information and a list of scholarship. All publications are listed in reverse chronological order. Dissertations, publications that are forthcoming, and audio recordings are not included in this bibliography. While some faculty members publish outside the legal field, we tried to include only law or law-related material. We also added any resources that current College of Law faculty members felt were relevant to a complete understanding of their scholarship. If an article was published in more than one journal, we tried to include only the first publication of the article.

Some faculty members have extraordinarily long lists of publications. For these faculty members, such as Roscoe Pound, we chose a representative selection of their publications to print in this bibliography. We are happy to assist anyone needing a complete list of these faculty publications.

We used the phrase "No relevant results" underneath the biographical information of a faculty member, if we could not find any legal scholarship under his or her name or if we were unable to determine if a publication was actually written by our faculty member (for example, if the faculty member had a common name).

Due to the nature of this undertaking, we hope that all names, dates and publications are correct, but, as with any large project, there may be errors or omissions. We will make corrections in future updates of this bibliography. Scholarship from current College of Law faculty members is available on the College of Law Web site and often in Social Science Research Network and Digital Commons. We encourage readers to review these resources for material published after the 2012–2013 academic year.

Finally, we would like to thank all of our colleagues at the Schmid Law Library, Associate Dean Glenda Pierce, and Lily Amare Carr for their assistance with this project.
