Abstract

The treaties signed by the US and the various Indian nations continue to be powerful litigation tools, as demonstrated in the 1999 Supreme Court case Minnesota v. Mille Lacs Band of Chippewa Indians (526 U.S. 172). Over the years, many cases have been heard but it is noteworthy that of the over 370 Indian treaties enumerated by the Department of State, more than 80 have never been cited in the opinion of any trial at the federal court level. This note identifies these absent American Indian treaties. © 2001 Elsevier Science Ltd. All rights reserved.

Keywords: American Indians; Treaties; Federal court system; Federal Indian law

A study of treaties constructed between the Indian nations within the borders of the US and the US federal government reveals that many were never discussed in the Supreme Court or in any other court at the federal level¹. The list of absent treaties is surprisingly long: 84 of these 375 ratified documents have not appeared in the opinions of these courts. This is particularly remarkable because "Indian law is primarily a body of federal law²" and the federal courts are the arenas for hearings that pertain to the parameters of all treaties. The numerous treaties cited in the 1999 Supreme Court case Minnesota v. Mille Lacs Band of Chippewa Indians (526 U.S. 172) is an indication of the intensity of such Indian–US government litigation. Indeed, this case brought for the first time before the Supreme Court two treaties — the Treaty with the Winnebago, 1837 (7 Stat. 544) and the Treaty with the Winnebago, 1846 (9 Stat. 878)³.

The introduction of these instruments as evidence of Indian-federal negotiations began over 200 years ago when, in Commonwealth v. Coxe (4 U.S. 170), the Supreme Court cited for the first time treaties between an Indian nation and the federal government. Three treaties were reported in that opinion: the Treaty with the Six Nations, 1784 (7 Stat. 15); the Treaty with the Wyandot, etc., 1785 (7 Stat. 16); and the Treaty with the Wyandot, etc., 1795 (7 Stat. 49)⁴. Since that time, the federal courts have assessed these negotiated documents and have adjudicated critical issues for the tribes and/or the federal government. Two recent cases may illustrate questions arising from the interpretation of these instruments.

The Miami Nation of Indiana unsuccessfully argued in US District Court⁵ that their treaty (Treaty with the Miami, 1854; 10 Stat. 1093)⁶ supported their claim for recognition by the Department of Interior. Government to government programs for Indians are not available to unrecognized tribes⁷.

In *United States v. Webb*⁸, the defendant asserted “that the alleged acts were not committed within ‘Indian country,’ as that term is defined at 18 U.S.C. § 1151⁹” and that the federal government lacked jurisdiction. In that petition, the US Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit was asked “to decide whether the Nez Perce Reservation, established by treaty in 1863, was diminished or disestablished by virtue of the allotment of land to tribal members and the sale of surplus lands to the US for settlement by whites pursuant to the General Allotment Act of 1887, 24 Stat. 388 (the “Dawes Act”)¹⁰.” The Court concluded that the Reservation had not been diminished or disestablished and denied the motion to dismiss.

These are only two of the numerous suits, brought before the federal court system, which entail aspects of treaty negotiations. The documents that support such actions sustain Cohen’s contention that “Indian treaties continue to constitute a major source of federal Indian law¹¹.” It is therefore surprising, given the importance of this material, that more than 20% of these treaties have never been cited in these judicial settings. However, it may be significant that 74 of the 84 treaties noted here were signed before 1850. Cohen has stated that “[t]reaties concluded during the last two decades of the treaty making period ... increasingly encroached upon the autonomy of the tribes¹².” The remaining 10 documents are a disproportionately small fraction of the more than 100 instruments consummated between 1850 and the end of treaty making in 1871¹³. The imposition of federal authority may have led to the initiation by tribes of federal court actions that concerned, and cited, almost all of these later treaties. In the last century, cases have frequently focussed beyond the issue of sovereignty to those of hunting, fishing, and gathering treaty rights¹⁴.

The Department of State ratified treaty numbering system¹⁵ affords an index into these treaties. The Department assigned numbers to Indian treaties in chronological order during the processing of these documents, and this sequence included seven pre-Revolutionary War treaties and three later instruments found in *American State Papers: Indian Affairs*¹⁶. Deloria and DeMallie have recently used this identification system, in part, to disclose the rich array of frequently overlooked materials of the diplomatic endeavors of the Indian nations¹⁷. In addition, this numbering system has been used to assemble several legal and cultural resources associated with each of the 375 Indian treaties in that Department of State collection¹⁸.

The Supreme Court compendium¹⁹ will bring together citations of Supreme Court opinions that referred to any of these 375 Indian treaties. This commentary is a much shorter endeavor and specifically identifies those treaties that have not been cited at the federal judicial level²⁰.

Table 1 is an assembly of:

- The Department of State assigned ratified treaty number of each treaty that has not been cited in the opinions of cases at the federal level;
- The name(s) of the participating tribe(s), with an expansion of the “etc.” notation — found in many treaty titles in Kappler’s work — into a complete list of parties. For example, ratified treaty number 99, the *Treaty with the Peoria, etc., 1818*²¹, identifies the Peoria as well as the Kaskaskia, Michigamea, Cahokia, and Tamaroa. The signatory lists were augmented in the same manner for the seven pre-Revolutionary War treaties and for the three American State Papers: Indian Affairs documents;
- The treaty page number in volume 2 of Kappler’s Indian Affairs: Laws and Treaties or the appropriate page in an alternative source(s);
- The treaty signing date according to Kappler’s data or to that of the alternative source(s); and
- The Statutes at Large citation(s) for that treaty or a citation to an entry in American State Papers: Indian Affairs.

20. Originally, volumes of Shepard’s Federal Statute Citations (Colorado Springs, CO: Shepard’s/McGraw-Hill) were used in this note to identify relevant cases. The Statutes at Large citation for each treaty was used as the search item in those resources. Unfortunately, the Court of Claims Reports (231 volumes; 1863–1982) are incorrectly listed as part of the Statutes at Large section of Shepard’s Federal Statute Citations. Coverage of Statutes at Large citations for the United States Claims Court begins in 1982, with the first volume of the United States Claims Court Reporter. Treaties not found in Shepard’s were therefore reexamined with the full Lexis-Nexis online database to locate documents cited in Claims Court cases before 1982. A total of 74 treaties — plus the seven pre-Revolutionary War and the three American State Papers documents — were in neither Shepard’s nor the full Lexis-Nexis online database. These 84 treaties are reported in this note. I thank Matthew L. Cheney of Shepard’s for clarifying the coverage for Statutes at Large citations within Shepard’s Federal Statute Citations.
