MEETA DISTANCE STUDENT

Distance M.S. Student - Christopher Logue

I have worked for Cornell Cooperative Extension in Schenectady County since 1993. Initially I was appointed as an extension agent and over the years have held several job titles. Currently I am known as the Agriculture/Horticulture Team Coordinator. My job here in extension is always changing, and I have the opportunity to focus on several areas. On a regional basis, I work with an outstanding team that provides educational programming to the agricultural industry. My role in this venue is to work with greenhouse producers in Albany, Schenectady, and Rensselaer Counties on a wide variety of topics, including nutrient management and production scheduling, marketing and business management.

In Schenectady County I also have the opportunity to work with our community horticulture program. This includes a wonderful group of about 70 Master Gardener volunteers. In addition, we operate a 5,000 square foot greenhouse facility/educational center, where we offer job training for youth and adults as well as horticultural classes for the general public.

On the personal side, I have been married for almost fifteen years and have two great kids, Brigham who is five and just started kindergarten, and Olivia who will be eleven. We have a small farm where we raise registered Suffolk and Tunis Sheep. I am a 4-H leader and work with Natural Resources and Agriculture/ Animal Science Projects and have taught tractor safety several times.

I developed an interest in entomology as an undergraduate at the University of Vermont where I earned a Bachelor of Science in Plant and Soil Science in 1987. Over the years in extension, my interest in entomology grew, and several years ago with the encouragement and help of my family and numerous folks within extension, I enrolled in the distance program. Having a young family, a full time job, and a farm that all require time commitments every day, a distance program was the only way I would have been able to earn an advanced degree. As I complete my final projects and prepare for graduation, I want to thank everyone in the department as well as the other distance students for a challenging and valuable educational experience.
