Abstract

Illegal immigrants are people who come to the U.S illegally or come in legal through visa and stay over their stay period. There are many reasons why one would cross the border such as wanting a better life for themselves and families but some people, such as the President, do not see that. An estimated 381.5 billion between 623.2 billion dollars would be lost within the country if they were all deported. Illegal immigrants make up 65% of the agricultural production. It will cost millions and millions of dollars to deport every single illegal immigrant and also take about 20 years to deport all.

Key Points

- Immigrants help out the economy
- Immigrants only want better lives for themselves and their families
- Immigrants are also taxpayers
- Immigrants help with agriculture growth

N

Conclusion

Illegal immigrants are good for this nation whether people beg to differ. Immigrants are doing so much for the economy without the correct documentation, now imagine how many more benefits this nation could get if all illegal immigrants received documentation. When investing money on border control, a wall, and deportation police; the people of the U.S are not going to receive any benefits from this. Most of the money being used is from the people. If the U.S focused on helping instead of dividing, this nation would grow. Not only will this nation lose money and GDP but also culture and diversity which helps with socialization and communication. This is why deporting all illegal immigrants is a terrible idea and a waste of money. The kids of the future are the ones who are going to suffer with the amount of debt the nation will be in if all of the deportation ideas come to reality.
