FIFTY ATTEND OAH LUNCHEON IN NEW ORLEANS

Growing interest in scholarly editing was evident at the luncheon meeting of ADE recently held in New Orleans during the Organization of American Historians convention. Dr. George Farr of the National Endowment for the Humanities spoke at the session and gave a rundown on the types of projects NEH has supported or will help fund in the future. Dr. Farr spoke of both editorial subventions and of grants which are available for subsidizing the publication of books from scholarly editing projects.

President Arthur Link said that the rapid growth of the ADE was further proof that editors are searching for an organization which will serve as a clearinghouse for ideas and give cohesion to the editing discipline. Ms. Charlene N. Bickford, secretary-treasurer, reported that 153 editors have paid dues since the ADE was formed in November 1978.
