Abstract

Throughout the U.S. 20% of teens and adults between the ages 18 and 49 use a dating app on a daily basis. Dating apps can have a good quality of communication. Studies showed that 60% of the participants have had positive experiences with dating platforms. There is also information that dating apps can also be a sign of danger such as false information and false identity. This research will show what are the good and bad outcomes of using a dating app.

Key Points

- Research shows that 35% of users have a bachelor's degree compared to the 22% of high school graduates
- Dating apps allow long distance relationships to communicate
- Men are more likely to use a dating app than women
- 23% of users have never been on a date with someone they meet through a dating app
- Users state that their reality doesn't match their expectations

AGE RANGE

Conclusion and Discussion

There are many components when using a dating app like a person's age range, what dating app they're using and reasoning. Overall dating apps can feel like a person is talking to a screen. It's important to understand that dating apps can have both good and bad outcomes.

Future research on this topic can focus on child/teen abduction and the connection to a dating app. There are many signs to lookout for when using a dating app such as getting to know more about a person and not giving out personal information right away.
