A MATTER OF UNDERSTANDING

An Environmental Protection Agency Film

This movie gives facts concerning the coyote. A better understanding of other living things will determine how responsibly we make adjustments in the environment and govern the earth we share with the coyote and other creatures.

The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency recognizes that predation is a problem to the livestock industry, and that some coyotes inflict damage on sheep, swine, cattle and poultry production. However, the mission of the agency is to protect the environment, predators as well as livestock. EPA does not condone the wholesale extermination of all coyotes believing that environmental protection and prevention of livestock losses can best be achieved by increasing livestock management procedures to prevent predation and by selective removal of those predators that have a taste for livestock.

This film can be purchased from the Sales Branch, National Audiovisual Center (GSA), Washington, D.C. 20409. The price is $156 and checks should be made payable to "National Archives Trust Fund (NAC)."
