Insecta Mundi is a journal primarily devoted to insect systematics, but articles can be published on any non-marine arthropod taxon. Manuscripts considered for publication include, but are not limited to, systematic or taxonomic studies, revisions, nomenclatural changes, faunal studies, book reviews, phylogenetic analyses, biological or behavioral studies, etc. Insecta Mundi is widely distributed, and referenced or abstracted by several sources including the Zoological Record, CAB Abstracts, etc.

As of 2007, Insecta Mundi is published irregularly throughout the year, not as a quarterly issues. As manuscripts are completed they are published and given an individual number. Manuscripts must be peer reviewed prior to submission, after which they are again reviewed by the editorial board to insure quality. One author of each submitted manuscript must be a current member of the Center for Systematic Entomology.

Abstract. A faunal list of 996 species of Coleoptera in 552 genera in 74 families is presented for the Commonwealth of the Bahamas. For most species, island and locality within island collecting information is provided.

Introduction

Historically, the beetle fauna of the Bahamas has been very poorly known. Leng and Mutchler (1914) in their list of the beetles of the West Indies, recorded only 31 species specifically from the Bahamas. Blackwelder (1944-1957) listed 98 species from the Bahamas (Vaurie 1952b). In neither case did the authors include the names of the individual island for the records. The present list of 996 species in 552 genera in 74 families grew directly out of our experiences on Andros Island, where a list of the Cerambycidae (Thomas and Turnbow 2007) of that island grew into a list of Andros Coleoptera and finally into a checklist of the Coleoptera of the Bahamas as a whole. It should be seen as a preliminary list, as the Bahamas are still relatively poorly collected and the fauna is still poorly known, especially considering how close they are to the United States. Many specimens collected during our trips to Andros Island and Great Inagua remain unidentified.

The publication of this checklist completes a set of checklists that also includes Florida (Peck and Thomas 1998) and Cuba (Peck 2005), which with the Bahamas comprise a natural biogeographic unit with much in common faunistically and floristically.

The list provided here is a combination of literature records (referenced), new information based on our collecting on Andros Island in 2001, 2004, and 2006 and Great Inagua in 2007, and specimen records in the Florida State Collection of Arthropods (FSCA). Literature records for "Bahamas" or "Bahama Islands" only (Blackwelder 1944-1957; Darlington 1953; Erwin and Sims 1984; Leng and Mutchler 1914; O'Brien and Wibmer 1982; Peck 2005; Triplehorn and Watrous 1982; Wibmer and O'Brien 1986; and Young 1954) have been omitted when more specific data have been located. Locality information is presented verbatim; corrections and emendations appear in brackets. The repositories of all specimens listed are supplied when known.

Because the great majority of the species listed are new for the Bahamas, no attempt has been made to identify those as such. Many families are here newly reported from the Bahamas. However, it seems justified to mention the first Bahamian records of Heterobostrychus aequalis (Waterhouse) (Bostrichidae), an Asian powderpost beetle, and Aphanistichus cochinchinae seminulum (Obenberger) (Buprestidae), an Asian sugarcane pest. Both also are established in Florida.

The family composition and arrangement of the list follows Arnett and Thomas (2001), with the following exceptions: Zopheridae include the old Monommatidae (Monommidae) and Colydiidae (see Ivie 2002) and Hybosoridae include Ceratocanthidae (Ocampo 2006), and Cybocephalidae (Smith 2007) and Bolboceratidae (Král et al. 2006) are recognized as distinct families. Families are listed alphabetically; genera are arranged alphabetically under family headings; species are arranged alphabetically within genera.

In many cases the increase in the number of Bahamian species has been considerable. For example, Darlington (1951) recorded 45 species of Carabidae (excluding Cicindelinae) for the Bahamas; we here record 102 species, excluding Cicindelinae (106 species including the tiger beetles). Other families with large numbers of Bahamian species are: Curculionidae, 139; Cerambycidae, 84; Chrysomelidae, 70; and Tenebrionidae, 68. Specimen records reported here represent 27 islands, but well over half of the records, 534, are from Andros Island. Andros is the largest of the Bahamian islands and would be expected to have the largest fauna, but this number probably also reflects the relative amount of collecting effort expended there. Other islands with high numbers of records are Great Inagua, 169; South Bimini, 155; and Eleuthera, 130.

The Bahamas

The Commonwealth of the Bahamas is an 800 km long archipelago of 300 islands and 2000 cays lying roughly above the arc formed by Florida, Cuba, and Hispaniola. Only 30 islands are inhabited. Bimini is 80 km from Florida and Great Inagua is about 80 km from Cuba. Most of the islands are low; the highest point in the Bahamas is Mount Alvernia on Cat Island at 63 m. Combined area of the islands is 13,940 km².

Browne et al. (1993), Ratcliffe and Cave (2007), and Steiner (2005b) have all discussed at length the biogeography and faunal relationships of the Bahamas, with emphasis on the Cerambycidae, Scarabaeidae: Dynastinae, and Tenebrionidae respectively. The fauna of the Bahamas is of relatively recent origin since the Bahamas were completely inundated during the Pliocene. During glacial periods of the Pleistocene the northern Bahamas formed a continuous landmass called Paleoprovidence that was only narrowly separated from Cuba; the southern Bahamas (Crooked Island, Acklins, Mayaguana, San Salvador, Rum Cay, and Inagua) were separate islands during that period.

The Bahamian beetle fauna can be broken down into five groups: species shared with Florida and the southeastern United States, species shared with Cuba, species shared with Hispaniola, species widespread throughout the West Indies, and species precinctive ("endemic") to the Bahamas.
