MANY MINDS MADE LIGHT WORK this year as I distributed just over 130 reviews across eighty reviewers. Almost all the forty-five reviewers from Volume 27 of To Improve the Academy served again for this volume, and dozens of new colleagues volunteered to join us. I was amazed at the quality of the vast majority of the reviews: detailed and specific, helpful to the authors, methodologically savvy, substantively rich covering content to wording, and long (one to four pages single-spaced). Although the reviewers didn't always agree about a given manuscript, they explained the values and standards they used to arrive at their recommendations.

Those who worked so diligently to bring you the best possible To Improve the Academy include Dorothe Bach, Gabriele Bauer, Danilo Baylen, Laurie Bellows, Lillian Benavente-McEnery, Jim Benner, Donna Bird, Phyllis Blumberg, Jim Borgford-Parnell, Carolyn Brown, Jeanette Clausen, Eli Collins-Brown, Jodi Cressman, Bonnie Daniel, Cynthia Desrochers, Michele DiPietro, Sally Barr Ebest, Bonnie Farley-Lucas, Kim Fielding, Clifford ("Kip") Finnegan, De Gallow, Chris Garrett, Francine Glazer, Judy Grace, Stacy Grooters, Elizabeth Yost Hammer, Jace Hargis, Nira Hativa, Sue Hines, Eric Hobson, Linda Hodges, Katherine Hoffman, Sallie Ives, Wayne Jacobson, Doug James, Kathleen Kane, Bruce Kelley, Diana Kelly, Joseph ("Mick") LaLopa, Bruce Larson, Marion Larson, Jean Layne, Virginia S. Lee, P. Rachel Levin, Deandra Little, Alice Macpherson, B. Jean Mandernach, Jean Martin-Williams, Leslie McBride, Daniel Mercier, Sal Meyers, Cheryl Chute Miller, Stephen Moore, Theresa Moore, Bonnie Mullinix, Ed Neal, Linda Noble, Ed Nuhfer, Leslie Ortquist-Arhens, Patrick O'Sullivan, Pratul Pathak, Donna Petherbridge, Susan Polich, Nancy Polk, Michael Potter, Edwin Ralph, Gerald Ratliff, Ann Riley, Stewart Ross, Brian Rybarczyk, "Beez" Lea Ann Schell, Jen Schoepke, Ike Shibley, Jennifer Shinaberger, Julie Sievers, Suzanne Tapp, Brigitte Valesey, Karen Ward, and Mary Wright. In addition, thanks are due to Hoag Holmgren, executive director of the POD Network, for supporting my efforts, and to David Brightman and Aneesa Davenport of Jossey-Bass for gently keeping me on track. I am also grateful to my husband, Greg, for being so good about my working longer hours to get this job done properly.

Associate editor Judith E. Miller is about the best collaborator one can have. She brought to the task her impressive talents as a scholar, especially her probing intelligence and precision communication skills, and as an administrator, which includes organization, tact, time management, and the ability to stay on top of everything. Her comments on, recommended revisions to, and close editing of just over half the accepted manuscripts were constructive and right on target, and she never missed any of the tight deadlines we had to meet. She is going to make a stellar editor of the next two volumes of To Improve the Academy. Jim Groccia is fortunate to have been selected as her associate editor; he will be learning from a master.

Clemson University's Office of Teaching Effectiveness and Innovation is a one-person office, so I do not have staff members to thank for their assistance in preparing this volume. But I do want to express my deep appreciation to William Weathers, Geraldine Hunter, and Sheilah Bagwell for the assistance and the wonderful company they give me, even though they belong to the instructional technology unit.
