The Hopkins-Nanjing Center organized a trip to teach English at a school built for the disaster victims of the big earthquake that shook Sichuan in 2008. We've gone every semester since the earthquake. Before classes started, we took a trip to the old campus. There were still many remnants of that sorrowful day last year: pencils, backpacks, even English textbooks. Some of our volunteers climbed up to the top of the ruins. All we could do was lay flowers.
