"LAWYER? I haven't got one!"

We hear this every day in the Trust Department. But it doesn't discourage us. Because we have yet to meet the man — or woman — who doesn't know a lawyer. They're just surprised that we prefer to have their lawyer present while we discuss estate plans... and that we insist upon his drawing the necessary instruments.

HAS YOUR LEGISLATURE CHANGED THAT LAW?

Time after time in your daily practice you tentatively resolve an issue on the basis of some section of your state code, statutes or uncompiled laws as that section appears in a volume on your library shelves. You need then to know whether legislative action has changed that section since publication of that volume. To act definitively without such current information would be hazardous indeed.

Shepard's has spent eighty-eight years perfecting a citation system to supply precisely such information concerning both state and federal statutory law.

Amendments, repeals, additions and other changes in existing laws are concisely indicated in the various Shepard compilations of Citations to Statutes. They are shown there with amazing promptness—frequently while the legislature is still in session.

Your client is entitled to have your opinion predicated on the law as it reads today—not as it stood yesterday!

KEEPING IN STEP WITH THE GROWTH OF EMPLOYEE BENEFIT PLANS

The growth of pension and profit-sharing plans in the United States has been one of the dramatic developments in our recent economic history. These employee retirement programs are commanding the attention of an ever-growing number of companies, their management, their legal counsel.

The Omaha National Bank is serving as trustee of a wide variety of benefit plans, large and small. Attorneys and their clients are invited to draw on the administrative and investment background of our officers in finding sound answers to employee benefit plan problems.
