MEAT ALTERNATES

If meatless days or rationing of meat actually becomes a necessity home makers can help in this possible meat shortage by using more of the foods that are plentiful and less beef and pork.

There are several other foods that may be used to provide protein. Protein is needed by the body to build and repair tissue, supply the needed amino acids and to give vigor and energy. Those proteins that contain all the essential amino acids are milk, meat (including poultry and fish), eggs, cheese, and soybeans. Other good sources are legumes (dried beans and peas) and nuts.

The recipes given below are suggestions for meat alternates, and ways of extending meat or making it go farther.
