Abstract

Mainly this study sought to find out primary sources of law undergraduate law students cite in their research projects. It also sought to ascertain most frequently cited sources as well as their availability in faculty of law libraries in Anambra and Enugu States of Nigeria. Five research questions guided the study. The research design was a survey. A total of 543 projects were used for the study. Instrument for data collection were checklist and interview. Data collected were analysed using descriptive statistics of frequencies and percentages to answer research questions 1,2 and 3. Responses from the law librarians in research questions 4 and 5 were qualitatively analysed. Findings of the study revealed that most of the information sources cited were not available in the four law libraries studied. Problems which impinge on the provision and availability of these resources were highlighted. Finally strategies that will enhance the availability and use of these information sources in faculty of law libraries in Anambra and Enugu States of Nigeria were recommended.

Keywords: citation analysis, research projects, statutes, law reports, law libraries. Anambra State, Enugu State, primary sources

INTRODUCTION

The word law conjures and evokes varied meanings in the minds of people. Used technically it means a complex system of formal rules, principles and processes regarded as necessary and enforced in an institutionalized manner based on the need to regulate social relations, so as to attain some social goal; the end being attainment of good life and regulated interaction between members of a given society. Law emanates from customs of a people. When a particular custom being observed or practiced over a period of time in a given society is imposed on that society as expected standard of behaviour, it acquires the status of law. A breach of that law attracts a sanction (Ikpeze, 2011).

While there is no universally accepted definition of law, it can be simply defined as a body of rules and regulations that guide human conduct and are accepted as binding by the society. Society directly enforces laws, breach of which exposes the culprit to punishment in the form of fines or imprisonment or redemption of damages awarded against the culprit. Every society, whether primitive or civilized, is being governed by a body of rules which the members of that society regard as expected standard behaviour. It involves the idea of obligation so as to conform to set rules properly referred to as law.

Before the legal profession was introduced in Nigeria, individuals pleaded and settled their disputes before elders, chief, emirs, and obas within a given community. With the British rule which was introduced in 1861 came the English legal system in Nigeria. The training of Nigerians as members of the legal profession ensued after. In Nigeria, the training of lawyers starts properly at the university. Legal education in Nigeria is twofold – academic and vocational. The academic stage, which starts at the university, leads to the award of Bachelor of Laws degree (LL.B). The vocational stage is undertaken at the Nigerian Law School. Onadeko (2005) rightly observed that legal education academic as well as vocational is a vital ingredient that affects the quality of the Nigerian justice system and role of lawyers in the political, economic and social development of the country. If the legal education is poor, it is impossible to produce world class jurists, practitioners or judges. There is therefore a direct relationship between the quality of legal education and quality of lawyers.

Legal research and ability to find the law is a most useful weapon without which no lawyer can survive and thrive in such an adversarial judicial system as practiced in Nigeria. Legal research is the search for authority and materials that are in the law books and publications stocked away in the various legal collections (Dada, 2011). The ability to perform legal research is one of the basic skills of a lawyer. This means that the use of the law library and the information resource centre should be part of his training right from his undergraduate days at the Faculty of Law and the Law School.

The primary tool of the lawyer is the book. Both the study and practice of the legal profession is book intensive. A lawyer will always make a poor submission if he does not refer to legal authorities. Similarly, a judgment will not be rich without referring to previous decided cases as authorities. These legal authorities are always obtained from a good law library. Through law libraries, members of the legal profession, even “unlearned” men keep abreast of legal developments in the country. In the words of Littlewood (2004), an under-trained and under-educated lawyer is a menace to his client, a danger to himself ...of little use to his society and a disgrace to his profession. This underscores some of the dangers inherent in a deficient system of legal education. A lawyer can only be as good as the system of legal education that produced him (Onadeko, 2005). This explains the rationale behind the accreditation of the various faculties of law in Nigeria by both the Council of Legal Education and the National Universities Commission.

Information resources in law can be categorized into two namely, primary sources and secondary sources. Primary sources are the rules of law that are binding upon the courts, government, and individuals. Examples are statutes, regulations, court orders and court decisions. They are generated by legislators, courts and administrative agencies. Secondary sources are commentaries on law that do not have binding effect but explain what the law is or should be (Legal Information Institute, 2010). The resources available to find legal authority are vast and complicated, leading many law faculties to require students to take a course on legal research.

Statement of the Problem

Law libraries are not only essential but crucial to the study and practice of the legal profession. In spite of this role, these libraries currently appear to be under resourced due to the prevailing downturn of funding in the universities, information explosion, rising courses of study and steady rise in readership of Nigerian university law libraries. This situation becomes worrisome when one considers its impact on the quality of legal practitioners which are being produced in our universities and the future of the legal profession in Nigeria. It is however not known through research what primary sources of law are cited in undergraduate projects as well as their availability in the faculty of law libraries, particularly those in Anambra and Enugu States of Nigeria. Although citation analysis has been carried out in the past in some parts of Nigeria, none seems to have been carried out in Anambra and Enugu States of Nigeria. This gap in knowledge does not allow the law librarian to ascertain whether the law library supports the research effort of the faculty. These form the focus of this study.

Purpose of the Study

This study sought to find out the:

1. Primary sources of law cited in undergraduate research projects in faculty of law libraries in Anambra and Enugu States of Nigeria.
2. Primary sources of law that are most frequently cited in undergraduate law projects in these libraries.
3. Availability of cited primary sources of law in faculty of law libraries in Anambra and Enugu States of Nigeria.
4. Challenges law libraries encounter in the provision of cited information sources to law students in Anambra and Enugu States of Nigeria.
5. Strategies law librarians can adopt to improve the availability and utilization of cited information resources in undergraduate law projects in Anambra and Enugu States of Nigeria.

Research Questions

The following questions guided the study:

1. What primary sources of law are cited in undergraduate research projects in faculty of law libraries in Anambra and Enugu States of Nigeria?
2. What are the most frequently cited sources of law in undergraduate law projects in these libraries?

3. What cited primary sources are available in faculty of law libraries in Anambra and Enugu States of Nigeria?
4. What challenges do law librarians encounter in the provision of cited information sources to law students in faculty of law libraries in Anambra and Enugu States of Nigeria?
5. What strategies can law librarians adopt to improve the availability and utilization of information sources cited in undergraduate projects in Anambra and Enugu States of Nigeria?

Review of Related Literature

The Nigerian legal system has a common law tradition. Common law system evolved from the study of court decisions (stare decisis) made by judges in the settlement of disputes during the 11th and 12th centuries in England. Nigeria being a former colony of Britain has imbibed the tradition of stare decisis which enjoins that earlier decisions should be binding authorities for subsequent cases (Ibeh, 2011). By this principle, Nigerian courts are duty bound to observe and abide by the principle of judicial precedent. Similarly, the Nigerian legal system is characterized largely by English legal rules and principles. As a result of the colonial influence during its formative years and the subsequent imposition of English law, the Nigerian legal system has acquired a dual structure comprising customary law and English law.

The principal legal sources of Nigerian law are therefore the Constitution; local statutes; case law; English law comprising Acts or Orders-in –Council applying directly to Nigeria; statutes of general application, the common law and doctrines of equity and customary law (Asein, 2005). The problem of maintaining a comprehensive collection of these resources is further compounded by the erratic nature of law publishing whereby laws are either repealed, amended or promulgated from time to time. The on-going global economic meltdown has further shrunk the federal and state governments' allocations to institutions of higher learning as well as the value of the naira. This has serious implications since maintaining a virile law library collection is capital intensive.

The writing of research project is an essential requirement for the award of Bachelor of Law degree (LL.B). The project topics may cover a wide of range subjects in law. Usually these research works assume the form of long essay. Sometimes they are empirical in nature depending on the institution awarding the degree. These research reports are written under the guidance of assigned supervisors. At the completion of such works, oral defence is conducted and grades awarded. Information resources required for the production of such research reports can be sourced either from the faculty law library or other law libraries.

Research projects in law have some unique features which make them different from research projects in other disciplines. A typical research project in law is similar to law textbook. A research project in law has a separate reference section for table of statutes and table of cases consulted. The table of statutes indicates the title of the law cited and its effective date. This list is usually arranged chronologically. Whereas the table of cases is a long list of case laws cited in the work which is arranged alphabetically indicating the page numbers where the cases were mentioned in the work. Citation to a law report includes the parties to the case, the year, abbreviation of law report, volume number, the part and the page number. Both the table of statutes and table of cases (usually long) appear as preliminary pages before the main text. It is different from the bibliography to secondary sources listed at the end of the text. Thus citation pattern in law makes the number of citations in a typical research project in law a bulky one.

A citation is the acknowledgement one document receives from another. It is a bibliographical entry in a footnote, reference list, or bibliography of a document that contains enough information (author, title, publisher or journal title) to verify the original item (Leiding, 2005). While citation analysis is a bibliometrics technique in which works cited in publications are examined to determine patterns of scholarly communication, for example the comparative importance of books versus journals or of current versus retrospective sources in one or more academic disciplines (ODLIS, 2009). The citations in student research papers, theses and dissertation are also examined by librarians for purposes of collection evaluation and development. According to Meho (2007), citation analysis is a branch of information science in which researchers study the way articles in a scholarly field are accessed and referenced by others.

Citation analysis is performed by counting how many times a paper or researcher is cited. It works on the assumption that influential scientists and important works are cited more frequently than others. Citation analysis assumes that references to a particular journal reflect a scholarly impact of that article on the author of the citing work. Another assumption is that the accumulated citations to a given author's work in some sense reflect the impact of that author on scholarship and research.

Since citation analysis derives its data from references made in a completed work, it is a useful tool for understanding subject relationship, author effectiveness, publication trend and so on. With citation analysis one can evaluate and interpret citations received by articles, authors, and other indications of scientific activity. Citation analysis is also a way to understand users. Curtis (2005) observed that studying references cited by one's faculty publications or student papers shows the type of sources most commonly used and valued locally in their disciplines. Casserly and Bird (2003) acknowledged citation analysis as a good method of tracing the historical development of a given field of study and that it lays a proper foundation for future research in the field.

Citation analysis is an effective tool for collection development. Sam and Tackie (2007) quoting Smith stated that citation analysis is now commonly used to determine what titles to purchase, to discontinue, or to weed. Librarians in various disciplines use it to eliminate costly low used/ unused journals, purchase needed materials and ascertain core journals needed for patron use, and to reveal the most active research area in a particular area. Citation analysis is also useful in identifying core journals because of the bibliometric phenomenon known as the law of scattering, which describes the manner in which articles on a subject are dispersed through the periodical literature. A small percentage of journals normally accounts for a large percentage of cited articles in any given field. Citation frequency and impact factor could be helpful in determining the optimum make-up of special and general collections. This can serve as guide to determine the back files, binding and retention schedules of science journals (Okiy, 2003).

The availability of information sources needed for such research in faculty of law libraries has been a source of worry to law librarians and all persons involved in the training of lawyers. Availability of information sources means ensuring their presence in libraries for immediate use (Aguolu and Aguolu, 2002). Once the user encounters difficulty in locating and using the material, frustration sets in and this may affect the quality of such research. References cited in these research reports not only present the origins of student's researches but also show students' information literacy in retrieving, accessing and selecting information resources (Szu-chia, 2007). The availability of cited resources in the library collection goes a long way to prove the readiness of Nigerian university law libraries to support clinical legal education which is the current trend in the reform of legal education in Nigeria. But many faculties of law have inadequate law libraries that are poorly stocked and so badly staffed that they cannot support teaching and research programmes even at first degree level (Jegede, 1977). Koleoso (2007) made a similar observation twenty years after when she stated that many law libraries are not really worth their salt because of various problems facing them. She identified unavailability of materials in the law libraries as one of the factors militating against effective law library services. Tuyo (2007) quoting Daintith aptly described the situation in developed countries such as United Kingdom. As far back as 1996, all law libraries subscribed to at least one on-line database, and 84% to at least two. Ninety two percent (92%) subscribed to at least one in-house database and seventy seven percent (77%) to at least three in-house databases. These figures show that majority of the libraries in the United Kingdom are moving towards electronic sources as far back as 1996. A critical mass of current United States law is now available in digital form and a critical mass of European law should be available in few years (Martin, 2008). Nigeria is still making frantic effort to join the digital age. It is against this background that this study examined the citation analysis in law projects from government-owned universities that offer law in Anambra and Enugu States of Nigeria.

Methodology

The research design was a survey. The sample size comprised of 543 undergraduate projects in law drawn from four university law libraries in Anambra and Enugu States of Nigeria.

Universities selected were University of Nigeria, Nsukka; Nnamdi Azikiwe University, Awka; Enugu State University of Science and Technology and Anambra State University, Uli. All the citations in the 543 projects were used for the study. Four law librarians were interviewed. The instruments for data collection were checklist and interview. The data collected was analysed using descriptive statistics of frequencies and percentages to answer research questions 1,2 and 3. The results were presented in tables. Responses from the law librarians were qualitatively analysed. Decision rule to determine most frequently cited items was based on the mean score derived from each category of cited sources (law reports and statutes).

Results

Research Question 1: What primary sources of law are cited in undergraduate research projects in faculty of law libraries in Anambra and Enugu States of Nigeria?

Table 1 presents analysis of the citations on type of primary sources law students cite in their undergraduate projects in Anambra and Enugu States of Nigeria. Citation from each type of primary sources cited from the four faculty of law libraries studied were added together and presented as shown in Table 1 below.

Table 1:
Type of Cited Sources

Sources	ANSU	ESUT	NAU	UNN	Total	%
Law Reports	2482	2141	3742	3603	11968	55.25
Statutes	1226	1801	3761	2907	9695	44.75
Total	3708	3942	7503	6510	21663	100

Table I shows the type of primary sources undergraduate law students cite in their research projects. The study generated a total of 21663 citations. Out of this number, law reports has the highest citation of 11,968 which accounts for 55.25%. This is closely followed by statutes with 9695 citations representing 44.75%.

Research Question 2: What are the most frequently cited primary sources in undergraduate law projects in faculty of law libraries in Anambra and Enugu states of Nigeria?

Tables 2-5 presents result of the analysis on most frequently cited sources. Most frequently cited sources are cited sources with more citation count than others. In this study, decision rule to determine most frequently cited sources was based on the mean score derived from each category of cited sources (law reports and statutes).

Frequently Cited Foreign Law Reports

	Law Reports (Foreign)	No. of Projects	No. of Citation
1	All England Law Reports	170	566
2	Law Reports (Chancery Division)	232	532
3	Yale Law Reports	76	486
4	Law Reports (Probate Division)	189	335
5	Law Times	151	316

Table 2 presents result of analysis on foreign law reports. It can be seen from the table that only 5 foreign law reports with a mean score of 190 and above were identified as most frequently cited foreign law reports. Top on the list is All England Law Reports with 566 citations. The high citation this English law report received points to the fact that it is a preferred choice in foreign law reports. It is a British-based report which covers case laws on all subjects of law in England. It is also among the foreign law reports in the checklist for every law library in Nigeria recommended by both National Universities Commission and Council For Legal Education. It was closely followed by Law Reports (Chancery Division) which received 532 citations. This law report together with Law Reports (Probate Division) and Law Reports (Exchequer), Law Reports (King's Bench) and Law Reports (Queen's Bench) are published in series. Law Times cover reported English cases on various subjects of law. Most of these law reports are included in the list of recommended English publications which every faculty law library must have its collection.

Table 3: Frequently Cited Local Law Reports

S/N	Law Reports (Local)	No. of projects	No. of citation
1	Nigeria Weekly Law Reports	592	4647
2	Supreme Court Cases	253	766
3	Nigeria Law Reports	181	728
4	All Nigeria Law Reports	177	340

Table 3 presents result of the result on local law reports. From the table, it can be seen that 4 local law reports with a mean score of 273 and above were identified as most frequently cited local law reports in undergraduate law projects in Anambra and Enugu States of Nigeria. Nigeria Weekly Law Reports was outstandingly rated as the most cited local reports. It received

4,647 citations which is 53.33% of citations in that table. It is a weekly law report that covers a wide spectrum of subjects in law. The very high citation it received is an indication that it is a preferred choice of local law reports for law students. Two other law reports Supreme Court Cases and Nigeria Law Reports have very high citation of 766 and 728 respectively. When added together, these first three law reports account for more than 70% of the citation in this table. Following next is All Nigeria Law Reports with 340 citations.

18	International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, 1966	22	31
19	Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of Crime of Genocide	7	27

In Table 4 result of analysis on the most frequently foreign statutes are presented. The analysis shows that a total of 19 statutes with a mean score of 25 and above were identified as most frequently cited foreign statutes in the undergraduate research projects in Anambra and Enugu States of Nigeria. It can be seen from the table that 4 statutes received 100 citations and above. Top on the list is Sale of Goods Act, 1893 which had 232 citations while CEDAW received 211 citations. Ranking third in the list is Beijin Declaration with 132 citations. Universal Declaration of Human Rights is fourth in the rank with 103 citations. Other most frequently cited statutes in the table had less 100 citations. They received between 97 citations and 34 citations. First in this category are African Charter on Human and People's Right, 1981 and ICJ both of which received 97 citations each. The least citation in this table was received by Companies Act which had 34 citations. With the exception of Sale of Goods Act 1893, and Halsbury Laws of England the other foreign legal instruments are products of international conventions on human rights, labour related matters and arbitral awards. Nigeria is a signatory to most of these Conventions.

Table 5 presents analysis of citation on most frequently cited local statutes. From the table, it can be seen that 22 statutes with a mean score of 69 and above were rated as most frequently cited local statutes. Top on the list is the 1999 Constitution of the Federal Republic of Nigeria which received 1086 citations or 14.25%. This is the current constitution in force in Nigeria. It replaced the 1979 Constitution. The second highest citation was received by Laws of the Federation of Nigeria 2004 which had 949 or 12.46%. It should be noted that Laws of the Federation of Nigeria 1990 is an earlier edition of the 2004 version. Laws of the Federation of Nigeria, 2004 is a collection of all federal laws in force as at December 2002. The high citation the first two cited sources received added together constitute more than 30% of the entire citations in this table. There is, therefore, a yawning gap between these two sources and the rest in the table. It should be noted that most of the laws in this table that did not exceed 2004 are chapters in the Laws of the Federation of Nigeria 2004 with the exception of Adoption Laws of Anambra State, and Contract Laws of Anambra State which are state made laws. Both the 1979 Constitution and the Laws of the Federation 1990 are already overtaken by the LFN 2004 and the 1999 Constitution except for historic purposes. Every other law made after December 2004 can be found in federal gazette compilation.

Research Question 3: What cited primary sources are available in faculty of law libraries in Anambra and Enugu States of Nigeria?

Tables 6-9 present results of cited sources as recorded in Research Question 2. These were cited sources that were available in the four faculty of law libraries studied. The analyses were presented on availability of cited law reports, and statutes. In the tables, (1) stands for availability while (0) stands for unavailability of the cited sources in the law libraries.

Table 6 presents result of the analysis on availability of foreign law reports. From the table, 17 foreign law reports were cited. Out of this number, 11 law reports were available in all the law libraries. African Law Reports was available only in ESUT. In all, ANSU has 13(76%), ESUT 15(88%), while NAU and UNN have 16 (95%) each in their collection.

In Table 7 result of the analysis is presented on availability of local law reports. From the table, it can be seen that 32 local law reports were cited by law students in their research projects. Fifteen local law reports were available in all the law libraries. They include All Federation Weekly Law Reports of Nigeria, All Nigerian Law Reports, Federal Supreme Court Cases, Federation Weekly Law Reports, Monthly Law Reports, Nigeria Constitutional Law Reports, Nigeria Monthly Law Reports, Supreme Court Cases, Nigeria Weekly Law Reports, Northern Nigeria Regional Law Reports, Supreme Court Cases, Supreme Court of Nigeria Law Reports, Weekly Reports of Nigeria, Western Nigeria Law Reports and Western Region of Nigeria Law Reports. The rest were available either in two or three law libraries. The availability report shows that out of the 32 local law reports cited, ANSU has 18 (56%), UNN has 25 (78%), and ESUT has 31 (97%) while NAU has 32 (100%).

Table 8 presents the result of the analysis on availability of foreign statute/laws in the law libraries studied. From the table, 82 foreign law sources were cited. Out of this number, 43 were not available in all the law libraries. Only Halsbury Laws of England was available in all the law libraries studied. The availability figure in each law library stands as follows: UNN 7 (9%), NAU 15 (18%), ESUT 20 (24%) and ANSU 24 (29%). This result reveals that none of these 4 libraries has up to 30% of the foreign law cited in its collection.

In Table 9 result of the analysis is presented on availability of local laws cited by undergraduate law students. A total of 112 local law sources were cited. In all 29 laws were not available in any of the law libraries. Only the 1979 and 1999 Constitution of the Federal Republic of Nigeria was available in all the law libraries. The availability record of the local laws cited shows that ANSU has 15 (13%), ESUT 19 (17%), UNN 23 (21%) and NAU 61 (54%).

Research Question 4: What challenges do law librarians encounter in the provision of cited primary sources to law students in faculty of law libraries in Anambra and Enugu States of Nigeria?

Funding

The law librarians interviewed in the four law libraries reported that fund is a major barrier in the acquisition of information sources in their libraries. This also affects the payment of staff salaries. In the four law libraries, there is no separate budget for faculty of law libraries. The university librarian controls the library fund and consequently the law library budget. They also reported that the major source of fund for these law libraries is government subvention. From the interview each law library has its own peculiar funding problem. Paucity of fund is even worse in the state university. Enugu State University failed National Universities Commission accreditation in 2012 as a result of inadequate facilities. In all, responses gathered during the interview show that law libraries owned by the federal government is better funded than law libraries in state universities. Both the selection and acquisition of information sources is centrally done at the main university library. This causes delay in the processing of acquired resources as well as their availability in the law libraries.

Research Question 5: What strategies can law librarians adopt to improve the availability and utilization of information sources cited?

The four law librarians recommend that the university management should either create a separate or dedicated book vote for acquisition of information resources at the law library. The need for improved funding was also stressed. Subvention to the university and the law library in particular should be increased in view of current economic reality in Nigeria. State government subvention to state universities should be improved for enhanced collection development at the law libraries. In view of the paucity of fund in many government establishments in Nigeria, they recommend that law libraries should explore other avenues for improved funding through internally generated revenue. This suggestion was made in view of the fact that law has two regulatory bodies- the Council for Legal Education and the National Universities Commission. Each of these accrediting bodies has its requirement/standard which every faculty of law in Nigeria must satisfy during accreditation.

They also recommended that granting the law library a degree of viable autonomy whereby the law librarian and the dean of law will be at liberty to determine what and how information resources will be procured for the law library. This will improve the current situation. They also recommend that acquisition of information resources at the faculty of law libraries should be a continuous exercise. Such acquisition should reflect both the Council of Legal Education recommended texts for law libraries and the National Universities Commission Benchmark for faculty of law.

Discussion of Results

The result of the findings showed that law students cite more from law reports, than from other sources in their undergraduate research projects. Another primary source of law that received very high citation was the statute/laws. It should be noted that law reports and statutes are the primary sources of law. The finding corroborates the study by Obidimma and Ezech (2011) in which they identified law reports and statutes as primary source materials for legal research. Statutes include Acts, Laws, Decrees and Edicts while law reports are reports of more important cases decided by the superior courts which form a part of the primary sources of information in law researching.

In this study, most frequently sources are cited sources with more citation count than others based on their mean citation score. Among the various categories of information sources cited, law reports have the highest number of citations- 11968 representing 55.25%. A total of 9 law reports were identified as most frequently cited; out of which 5 are foreign law reports. All England Law Report was the most frequently cited foreign report with 566 citations. Others that also received very high citations in the rank are Law Reports (Chancery Division), Yale Law Reports and Law Reports (Probate Division).

It is important to note that both the Council of Legal Education and the National Universities Commission recommended these law reports in the list of foreign reports every faculty of law library in Nigeria must have in its collection. The All England Law Reports covers English case laws. Although it is a foreign report, the Nigerian legal system has a common law tradition as such faculty of law libraries in Nigeria are bound to acquire them.

Apart from the foreign reports, 4 local law reports were also identified as most frequently cited sources. The Nigerian Weekly Law Reports received the highest rating of 4647 citations. The Nigerian Weekly Law Reports is a weekly publication and covers important judgments delivered in Courts of Appeal and the Supreme Court of Nigeria. It also covers matters on all subjects of law. The high citation it received is a clear indication of its relevance and importance as the most desired local law reports in faculty of law libraries in Nigeria.

Statute is another primary source of law which received high citation count of 9695. A total of 41 statutes were identified as most frequently cited in law projects. Out of this number, 19 are foreign statutes while 22 are local. Among the local laws, the Constitution of the Federal Republic of Nigeria, 1999 has the highest citation. It received 1086 citations. It was closely followed by Laws of the Federation of Nigeria 2004. The 1999 Constitution of the Federal Republic of Nigeria is the current constitution in force in Nigeria. It is therefore not surprising that it received the highest citation. It is also mandatory for every law library to have copies of the Nigerian constitution in its collection.

The result of the finding on availability of law report is encouraging. It showed that 49 law reports were cited. Out of this number, 17 are foreign law reports. Each of the four law libraries has 11 foreign law reports in their collection; while 26 local law reports were available in all the law libraries. These include All Federation Weekly, Law Reports, Federal Supreme Court Cases, Federation Weekly Law Reports, Monthly Law Reports, Nigeria Supreme Court Cases, Nigeria Weekly Law Reports, Northern Nigeria Regional Law Report of Nigeria, Western Nigeria Law Reports. In as much as these listed law reports were available in these law libraries, a greater percentage of other local law reports including those recommended in the checklist for faculty of law library accreditation by both the Council of Legal Education and the National Universities Commission were not available in these libraries.

The unavailability of the cited law reports and statutes in these law libraries portends some danger for both the law students and law library. It is either the students starts purchasing these information sources on their own in which case they are forced to spend more money than they ought to on reading materials or they will source for it elsewhere. When this is the case, they will develop cold feet in going to the law library.

Interview conducted on the law librarians revealed that one of the major problems law libraries face in the provision of information sources to law students is paucity of funds. Faculty of law libraries are under the control of university librarians. There is also no separate book vote for the law library; as such all purchases are carried out at the main university library. The problem of poor funding is even worse at the state universities namely Enugu State University of Technology, and Anambra State University. The major source of fund in these libraries is subvention from the state government.

The bureaucratic arrangement which empowered the university librarian to control the acquisition of resources for the law library according to the law librarians is responsible for the late arrival of the acquired materials at the law library. In the National Universities Commission Benchmark, it was clearly stated that in the acquisition of library holdings in the law library, law faculties must be consulted and their recommendations seriously considered. In other words, acquisitions by law libraries should be guided by the recommendations of the faculties. It further stated that the need to update the holdings of law library should be boldly underlined. New issues of law reports and journals and current editions of books should be acquired from time to time.

Recommendations

Based on the findings of the study, the following recommendations were made:

1. Since law students rely heavily on law reports, statutes when writing their undergraduate projects, emphasis should be placed on the acquisition of these information resources in law libraries. There is need for improved funding and change in the acquisition policy of most of these law libraries to enhance the provision of current information resources in these libraries.
2. Faculty of law libraries should also use the identified frequently cited sources as guide during the acquisition of information sources so as to meet the research needs of law students. Most frequently cited sources are likely information materials that are in high demand. Priority attention should be given to such materials during the selection and acquisition of law library resources.
3. To enhance the availability of cited information sources in undergraduate projects, faculty of law libraries should endeavour to subscribe to prescribed online databases in law such as Westlaw, Lexis Nexis, Hein Online, Law Pavilion and Legalpedia. These databases have relevant and current electronic versions of law reports, statutes, textbooks, journals, and other reference sources which will supplement the unavailability of print media.
4. Autonomy of faculty of law libraries can no longer be compromised. Incidentally this administrative arrangement is a creation of the law establishing the university which vested the control of all faculty libraries on the university librarian. Time has come for a review and amendment of this law in Nigerian universities. However this should be handled with caution as complete autonomy may create another problem when people with questionable characters are in charge of the law library or the faculty of law

5. The procedure for the selection and acquisition of information sources at the law library has been prescribed by the 2007 NUC Benchmark. What is now required is the enforcement in all faculty of law libraries in Nigeria.
6. Faculty of law library development should be included in the critical area of the TET fund project. Faculty of law libraries through advocacy visits to the university authorities should endeavour to be included in the membership of the committee on TET Fund. This will help to improve the facilities of the law libraries.
7. Paucity of funds is endemic in virtually all government establishments in Nigeria. Time has come for faculty of law libraries to look inwards and devise strategies on how to raise funds through fee based services and partnership with some donor agencies.
8. Staff of the library should be regularly sponsored to conferences, seminars, workshops and in service training. This will help to check lethargy among law librarians and also help them keep abreast with recent developments in law librarianship.
9. Accreditation exercise in the universities by both the National Universities Commission and the Council of Legal Education should be carried out on a regular basis. It can be discerned from the interview of the law librarians that frantic effort universities make to meet up with the demands of the accrediting bodies has helped to improve the facilities in faculty of law libraries in Nigeria.

Conclusion

This study sought to find out primary sources of law undergraduate law students cite in their research projects. The study found out that law students in Anambra and Enugu States of Nigeria rely heavily on law reports and statutes in the writing of their undergraduate research projects. It however discovered that most of the information resources cited were not available in the four law libraries studied.
