Dear Colleague:

One of the features of the Professional and Organizational Development Network's Fourth Annual Conference on faculty development in November will be an Information Fair.

Before inviting your organization to send materials to the Conference, a word about the Network and the Conference. The POD Network, in its fourth year of operation, seeks to link and provide resources to faculty and staff in higher education concerned with what is often called "faculty development." In addition to the annual conference, the POD Network offers training workshops and other opportunities. Last year's conference attracted 300 faculty development leaders from around the country.

Throughout the conference we will have display areas where handouts and copies of materials related to professional and organizational development will be available to participants. We believe that many people will be particularly interested in seeing materials developed and used by other programs such as yours. I would like to invite you, therefore, to send a copy or copies of any materials which you would be willing to share so that we can display them at the conference. Please be sure to include information about the availability of copies, cost, and so on.

I would guess that the following would be examples of the types of materials which would be of interest:

- ✓ 1) description of the kinds of services which you offer to faculty, administrators and students;
- 2) copies of materials which you have used in working with any of the above. It seems to me that there is a special interest in printed materials about teaching for faculty members;
- ✓ 3) newsletters;
- ✓ 4) descriptions of colloquia, workshops, seminars and such which you have conducted;
- 5) materials used for recruiting your clientele;
- ✓ 6) examples of projects undertaken by faculty who have received teaching mini-grants.

While single "sample copies" will be welcome, feel free to send 100 or more copies of any resource material you can share. (It will not be feasible to return materials to you.)

OVER

Please send whatever materials you are willing to share as soon as possible--and no later than October 27th--to the conference site at the following address:
