INTRODUCTION

The intent of this document is to describe the sources of thirteenth-century English polyphonic music that are of thirteenth-century English origin. The few major exceptions will be detailed below. Given the paucity of written sources of any kind of polyphony from before ca. 1200, and the few examples of thirteenth-century English polyphony in manuscripts of non-insular origin or in sources from after ca. 1300, this is close to being a record of all the known English polyphony composed before ca. 1300. I am indebted to Profesor William J. Summers of Dartmouth College for many of the particulars of the descriptions to follow.

As an area of scholarly research, thirteenth-century English music, whether sacred or secular, monophonic or polyphonic, has long languished in the shadow of the admirable achievements of musicians in thirteenth-century France. Yet it was precisely in this century that the homogeneity of Anglo-French intellectual and high art culture across northern France and England most decisively began to fragment in a process of "subregional differentiation."¹ This process is much better understood in respect to manuscript illumination, sculpture, stained glass, architecture or the academic ¹See Thomson (1983), 4. For more detailed discussion of the relationship of French and English repertoires, see especially Everist (1992) and Losseff (1994).

achievements of the nascent English universities, for instance, than in respect to music. In the thirteenth century, particularly in the realm of sacred polyphony, the music of English high culture achieved its autonomy, developing into a polyphonic corpus of brilliant diversity and singular musical value as it diverged from the common international (i.e., Anglo-French) repertoire in respect to most features of this art form: texture, melody, harmony, counterpoint, rhythm, constructive devices, form, genre, and notation.²

Neglect of the thirteenth-century polyphonic English repertoire in favor of the French has many causes, including the anonymity of its insular composers, its religious subject matter and performance milieu, and the vagaries of academic fashion in the twentieth century. Above all, however, has loomed the problem of sources of English music, which are large in number but extremely fragmentary as a rule. They yield few clues about size, ordering of contents, provenance, or age. Moreover, only a small fraction of the musical compositions they document are integral works or damaged but restorable; the great majority are represented by isolated pages or smaller strips and patches containing tantalizing but unperformable portions of single voices or irregular segments of works in score. Fortunately, reproductions of most of these sources are now available as highly detailed color digital images stored in the Digital Image Archive of Medieval Music (DIAMM) at Oxford University, accessible on the internet, as of this writing, at www.diamm.ac.uk. One caution, though. The DIAMM identifications of individual leaves, where it differs from those used here, have yet to be entered into this document's manuscript descriptions.

Manuscript descriptions are for the most part presented below in order by library and shelf mark, as in RISM or DIAMM, with bibliographic references mostly to material that post-dates the relevant RISM entry. The descriptions aim to make more emphatic than heretofore those instances when two or more distinct medieval sources are housed under a single modern shelf mark (as for example, in London, British Library, Harley 5958 or Princeton, University Library, Garrett 119). Further, re-analysis of the sources has sometimes necessitated amendments to previous inventories and descriptions. We occasionally reverse recto and verso, re-arrange folios (as in F-Tours 925, D-Göttingen Theol. 220, and Reconstruction III) or conflate leaves from different locations or hosts (as in Canterbury, Cathedral Library 128/8 + 128/71; Oxford, Bodleian Library, Rawlinson C. 400* + Lat. liturg. b.19; and Reconstructions I, II, and III) in order to re-associate leaves or even to reconstruct a dismembered or disordered original as best as possible. This will always be signalled explicitly.

²Recent broader overviews of English musical developments in this period include Crocker (1990), Caldwell (1991), and Lefferts (1991). More specialized studies include Wibberley (1976), Lefferts (1986), Malyshko (1989), and Losseff (1994). PMFC XIV (1979) is a recent edition of the restorable pieces and major fragments. For a succinct typology of polyphonic genres, see Sanders (2001d). Lefferts (1986) has lists of thirteenth-century polyphonic motets, conductus-rondellus, voice-exchange pieces, and troped chant settings. Losseff (1994) has tables and appendices cataloging sources, pieces, and concordances.

EXCLUSIONS

Omitted here by definition are all English sources of polyphony from before the thirteenth century. These are indeed few in number: the late tenth-century organa of the Winchester Troper (Cambridge, Corpus Christi College, 473)³; a late eleventh-century discant setting from Canterbury (Oxford, Bodleian Library, Bodley 572)⁴; and a twelfth-century discant setting from Winchester in the Downpatrick gradual (Oxford, Bodleian Library, Rawlinson C. 892).⁵ Also not described is the 'Younger' or 'Later' Cambridge Songbook (Cambridge, University Library, Ff. i. 17 (1)), a source of ca. 1180-1230 the question of whose provenance has been controversial, but whose most recent editor (Stevens 2005) decided in favor of English origin.⁶ See also Hartzell (2006), a catalogue of manuscripts written or owned in England up to 1200 containing music.

Sources of the thirteenth century that are excluded are more diverse. The most significant are some Notre-Dame notation, above all. Passed over silently are some Notre Dame ghosts, which are books now lost but for which documentary evidence exists.⁷ Nor will further mention be made of two significant British manuscripts of conductus and motet texts, both without musical notation, in the Bodleian Library at Oxford, namely, Additional A 44 and Rawlinson C. 510. At the same time, the famous "Notre Dame" manuscript W1 (Wolfenbüttel, Herzog August Bibliothek, Cod. Guelf.

628 Helmst.), from St. Andrews, which is the only almost-integral British music codex to survive from the century, is included below only in a kind of “stub” entry.

No more will be said about the Bridport ghost (which may have been in any event a fourteenth-century source).⁸ Also set aside are the four thirteenth- and fourteenth-century polyphonic settings of the hymn Nunc sancte nobis in English sources: Cambridge, St. John’s College, 102 (D.27), fol. 141; London, British Library, Harley 4664, fol. 182; London, British Library, Royal 2. D. XXII, fol. 109; and Oxford, Corpus Christi College, 134, fol. 73-73v.⁹ And also omitted are two sources of mass ordinary settings generally regarded as continental, but that Luther Dittmer or Max Lütolf have suggested may be English, namely, Paris, Bibliothèque Nationale de France, lat. 11411 and lat. 15129.¹⁰

Another category of sources not further identified or described here is those sources of similar age but foreign provenance that contain relevant English polyphony, such as the Montpellier Codex (Montpellier, Bibliothèque Interuniversitaire, Section Médecine, H196). Thus if a piece has hallmarks of an English origin but does not survive in any English source, we do not enter it here. While that does not affect too many possible candidates among motets surviving solely in non-insular sources, the impact is significant for the conductus. The issue of how many conductus surviving exclusively in non-English sources may be of insular origin rapidly gets very contentious, and will not be further developed here, so suffice it to say that there may be 13th-century English conductus surviving only abroad that are not to be found below.

Finally, we omit fourteenth- or fifteenth-century sources transmitting later copies of thirteenth-century music.¹¹ One lesser known example is a fragment, now in ¹¹For thirteenth-century polyphony surviving into the fifteenth century, see the music examples on fols. 34v-36 of Cambridge, Corpus Christi College, 410, in a fifteenth-century copy of Walter Odington's De speculatione musice, particularly in respect to the characteristically English three-voice rondellus Ave mater domini (fol. 34v). On this

Cortona, that is likely of fourteenth-century continental origin, which contains an English motet on Becket that, judging by its notation, may have been composed in the late thirteenth century.¹²

INCLUSIONS

At the earlier boundary, we include three sources of the late twelfth or earliest thirteenth century---London, British Library, Burney 357, London, British Library, Harley 524, and Dorchester, Dorset Record Office, PE/NBY/MI 1---although the Younger Cambridge Songbook, of similar age, is not included here (as noted above).

There are no firm guidelines representing a scholarly consensus on how to draw the line ca. 1300.¹³ For inclusiveness, two manuscripts of the late thirteenth or early fourteenth century (precise dates controversial) which were reproduced in EECM 26 as fourteenth century sources---London, Westminster Abbey, 33327 and Oxford, Bodleian Library, Rawlinson liturg. d. 3---are inventoried below. Also at the later boundary, described here are a major sources of the turn into the fourteenth century surviving in Canterbury, Wisbech, Tours, Dublin, and Wolfenbüttel---some relatively recently uncovered---that are complementary to the earliest sources of fourteenth-century polyphony reproduced in facsimile in EECM 26. All are primarily sources of motets or motet-like troped chant settings.

For the sake of the comprehensiveness in the descriptions, they include fourteenth-century music when it is directly associated as a later addition to relevant material in an earlier source, such as the later pieces in London, British Library, Harley 3132, Oxford, Bodleian Library, Mus. C 60, and Reconstruction III.

A separate comment is in order here regarding the so-called Worcester fragments, which consist of the remains of nine or more codices. The continuous numeration of pieces followed in the pioneering edition of most of this material by Luther Dittmer¹⁴ tends inadvertently to disguise the number and variety of sources represented in these sadly fragmentary remains, and the complexity of the situation has not been ameliorated by its confusing presentation in RISM B/IV/1. These nine or more sources need disentangling, and one solution is offered here. Most of the fragmentary codices are separately treated in order by their call numbers at Worcester Cathedral Library, while the more substantial remains of three manuscripts that can be partially reassembled from leaves at Worcester and elsewhere are presented immediately following, as Reconstructions I, II, and III, comprising the small-format or motet book, the large-format volume, and the conductus book, respectively, as they have been called since the earlier part of the twentieth century. This treatment of Worcester material accounts for five new relevant fragments that were uncovered in the late 1990s in Worcester Cathedral Library codices F. 44, F. 45, F. 120, F. 175, and Q. 19. These, with the exception of the Q. 19 flyleaf, have been removed to Worcester Cathedral Library, Additional 68 and have been given a new "Fragment" number (Frag. xxxix, xl, xli, xlii). Three of the new fragments, two of which still bear original folio numbers, come from Reconstruction I.

SOURCE TYPES

The largest division that one can make among source types represented in this document is threefold, distinguishing purpose-copied rotuli and books of polyphony from music fascicles in commonplace books or miscellanies, and from isolated music entries on blank pages or flyleaves of otherwise unrelated material.¹⁵ These three categories distinguish sources of very different origin and purpose, and need to be kept distinct. When it is said, for example, that W1 is the only British source of polyphony to survive (nearly) complete from the 1200s, its exceptional status must be understood in respect to professionally manufactured and, in general, carefully ruled and ordered codices of mensural music. Commonplace collections and isolated entries may indeed survive "complete."

Although some of the fragments of purpose-copied rotuli and books of polyphony testify to an eclectic, ad hoc approach by the copyist to the entering of repertoire, most reveal traces of quite systematic organization and contain a fairly narrow set of musical genres. Compositions might be entered liturgically, by genre and number of voices, or alphabetically. Extant foliations, or the projection of implicit manuscript organization to naturally suggested limits, sometimes reveal codices of substantial length. Reconstruction I has foliations up to cxxxix, for example, and Cambridge, Corpus Christi College, 8 has paginations up to 558. It appears that purpose-copied sources were mainly corporately owned, and often, when they had become musically outdated, they soon were thereafter turned over to the book binder to serve as scrap. However, a thorough reconsideration of Worcester bindings during the 1990s recataloguing of the cathedral library has yielded the important result that Reconstruction II only went under the binder's knife in the mid 1400s, and that Reconstruction I and Reconstruction III were only broken up in the later 1520s by Worcester monk-binder John Musard.¹⁶ Another exception to a story of quick destruction and re-use is represented by those few chant manuscripts where polyphony was directly entered in the main hand (e.g., Oxford, Bodleian Library, Rawl. liturg. d. 3, or London, British Library, Additional 28598); these tended to be longer-lived books.

Commonplace books are private compilations of material, assembled for entertainment, study or devotion out of public sight. Here the owner might include independent fascicles of music and might deliberately leave space at the ends of extracts of all kinds for later additions, related or unrelated, which might include monophonic or polyphonic music. Understanding this, we recognize that many of the extant miscellanies survive complete as such, including, for example, London, British Library, Harley 978 and Arundel 248, or Paris, Bibliothèque National de France, fr. 25408. These sources tend to be more informally copied and more diverse than any book of polyphony (except for the similarly eclectic Cambridge, Corpus Christi College, 8), mixing monophony and polyphony, works in English, French, and Latin, sacred and secular song, and instrumental music.

The same informality and diversity, including examples of musical settings of English texts, exists in the more isolated entries opportunistically set down on a blank page or flyleaf amidst unrelated material, such as those in Oxford, Bodleian Library, Douce 139, Oxford, Bodleian Library, Rawlinson G. 18, or Oxford, Corpus Christi ¹⁵For greater detail, see Losseff (1994), esp. 25-51 and 144-46, from which the following two paragraphs are principally drawn.

¹⁶ See Thomson (2001). At a roughly similar date, an English choirbook comparable to Old Hall was dismantled by an early sixteenth-century Cambridge stationer, Nicholas Spierinck. See Bent (1984).

College, 59). The line between these entries and those of a commonplace book can be easily drawn on the basis of the contrast between isolated compositions and small collections. When the principal codex is apparently not a private book but rather a communal volume like a collection of documents (Oxford, Bodleian Library, Douce 139) or a library book, the random music entries would be of our third type. The distinction is less clear when the host may have been a book for private use, like a diminutive psalter for private devotions (Oxford, Bodleian Library, Rawlinson G 18), or perhaps a textbook from the personal library of the master of a grammar school (Oxford, Corpus Christi College, 59). It is impossible to gauge the loss of music that was copied into commonplace books and more isolated leaves, but at least what has disappeared of these kinds of sources will have suffered the usual depredations that befell medieval books in later centuries, rather than the indignity of quick obsolescence that befell most purpose-copied polyphony.

MANUSCRIPT FORMATS

Textual descriptions inevitably minimize physical differences between the sources in respect to size, ink color, density and texture of parchment, and the like. As one acknowledgement of the rotulus or book as physical object, and of the activity of the scribe in laying out and executing its design, some figures for the size of page and written area of sources are given in the Table that follows this essay, adding the dimensions of some other well-known codices for comparative purposes. All dimensions reported there are given in millimeters (mm). In this table the sources are ordered from large to small, reporting first width, then height (w x h) for the written space and the entire page. Staff gauge data is for five lines in most cases. Tabulated order is governed by the width of the written space because this measurement is by far and away the most significant dimension governing book production and comparison.

Some of these measurement are speculative estimates, and some are exact, at least to within 2-3 mm or so. Of course, writing blocks may vary even in an apparently consistently ruled manuscript. Further, in the case of overall dimensions, figures may only be reliable to within a few centimeters, since we may report the current dimensions of manuscripts that have obviously been trimmed, and other times we report estimates based on, for example, a trimmed upper margin but intact lower margin, where we project the latter dimension back onto the former. Thus all of these numbers are "circa," and details should be sought in the manuscript descriptions and in the facsimile images themselves, most of which have been photographed with a ruler. In any event, it will be apparent from the data that variability to within a few millimeters has virtually no impact, except very locally, on the relative order of manuscripts by size.

The data on formats provides only the broadest of overviews. It mixes purpose-copied rotuli and books of music, whose dimensions were dictated by standard formats for polyphonic music, with manuscripts in which music was an addition within already fixed boundaries. It also mixes pages of different formats (nine or twelve independent staves, three or four three-staff systems, etc.). Two reliable and unsurprising tendencies emerge. First, purpose-copied rotuli and books of polyphony tend to be larger than either commonplace books or those with more isolated music entries. And second, purpose-copied rotuli and books tend to increase in size over the course of the century. Organizing the data around the width of written space generates a series that appears to be in the large chronological, as it corroborates chronologies based on other, independent criteria, such as changes in handwriting, musical notation, counterpoint, genre, and constructivist devices. Books of the generation of W1, of ca. 1240, are of the first generation of purpose copied books of polyphony in Western Europe. They tend to be small volumes, on the order of about 6" x 4" (160 x 110 mm) or just slightly larger. By the end of the thirteenth century, within the span of only some fifty to sixty years, music codices had steadily increased to two and three times the previously normative height and width of written space, and thus of overall dimensions. One of the very largest, London, Westminster Abbey, 33327 had exterior dimensions of at least 490 x 345 mm (or about 19" x 13"), for example, making it a bigger book than Old Hall. The surviving rotuli seem to have been about thirty inches long, and dimensionally, the younger rotuli are simply wider, with taller staves.

PROVENANCE

This document describes over sixty sources, representing at least that many medieval rotuli and books and perhaps up to a dozen more on account of those instances where a modern source may preserve leaves from more than a single manuscript. For only about half of the total is there any information at all concerning provenance. As a rule that information pertains to the host manuscript rather than to its musical binding material, and may on occasion signal local ownership only, rather than a local point of origin. Thus at best what we know about provenance is circumstantial. Nonetheless a fairly consistent picture emerges in which sacred polyphony is associated primarily with the larger Benedictine monasteries and monastic cathedrals, and other major abbeys and churches.¹⁷

If we generously allow binding fragments in a given locale to count for that location, even if they can no longer be identified with specific books in the library (a situation we find at Westminster Abbey, Canterbury, and Worcester, for example), then---to cite some of the better represented institutions---from Bury St Edmunds Abbey there survive Cjec 1, Csjc 138, and Cul 29; from Canterbury Cathedral, CAc 128/2, CAc 128/8 with 128/71, CAc 128/62, Ob 271, and Wisbech; from Durham Cathedral, Cjec 5 and Lbl Cotton xxix; from Reading Abbey, Lbl Harley 978, Ob 257, Ob 400* with Ob 19, and Owc 213*; from Westminster Abbey, Lwa 3 and Lwa 33327; and from Worcester Cathedral, at least nine sources. Lesser establishments are more often represented by a commonplace book or isolated entry than by a purpose-copied book of polyphony. Close scrutiny of the evidence in any individual case reveals how shaky some of these ascriptions of provenance are, but this does not topple the entire edifice.¹⁸ In the face of not only external evidence for provenance, but also internal textual evidence, especially derived from motets, Christopher Hohler's contrarian argument for London and the court as centers of polyphonic composition, with Oxford as the center of dissemination to the rest of England,¹⁹ has not yet found acceptance.

¹⁷The inclusion of fourteenth-century sources only strengthens this picture. See Lefferts (1986), 9-10, 155-85, with the same information consolidated in Lefferts (1992).

CATALOGUE AND DESCRIPTIONS

Aberdeen University Library, 2379/1

s. xiii med.

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

A fragmentary parchment rectangle forming a horizontal strip cut from the bottom of a bifolium (folios a, b); perhaps once the outer bifolium of a gathering. Now about 53 x 260 mm; width of original page ca. 160 mm; width of written space ca. 109 mm. Freely-ruled red five-line staves of gauge 7-8 mm. Text hand is gothica textualis semiquadrata and musical notation is of Notre-Dame type. Extensive later pen trials. The visible portion of fol. b verso is ruled for music but not notated.

II. HISTORY

No info. on this frag. Apparently once used as a strip to protect the end quire in an unidentified book, possibly one in the Aberdeen University Library. Now the first item in a folder compiled from binding fragments and other materials in that library.

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

Single parchment leaf housed in a modern guardbook and foliated 4; now 360 x 250 mm, with a written space of 290 x 215 mm; ruled in a single column of ten (recto) or eleven (verso) freely-ruled red five-line staves of gauge 15-19 mm. Major initials in blue and red with blue and red flourishing. Two text and music hands, the first pair responsible for no. 1 and the other for nos. 2 and 3. Both text hands are in gothica textualis quadrata. Musical notation of no. 1 is EMN with paired rhomboid breves; musical notation of nos. 2 and 3 is later and essentially Franconian, with declamation on long and breve. Possibly from an alphabetical grouping in the letter R.

II. HISTORY

No info. on music leaf. The notation of no. 1 suggests a date in the third quarter of the 13th century, with subsequent musical additions ca. 1300. Later it was the wrapper for some slim document and then used in the stuffing of the cushion of a 16th-century chair in Machynlleth. Given to the National Library of Wales in November 1991. For pen trials and other scribbles on the verso, see Wathey, RISM Suppl.

3. Rex excellentissime / Rex regnorum omnium fol. 4v; frag. troped chant setting a3 of Gloria trope Regnum tuum solidum with prosula O rex glorie; missing chant tenor was middle voice by range

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

Single parchment leaf with no foliations; trimmed on top, bottom, and outer edge with loss of one bottom staff; now 305 x 215 mm, perhaps originally 430 x 290 mm; written space now 260 x 160 mm, perhaps originally 350 x 200 mm; originally nine (now eight) red five-line staves freely ruled in a single column, with frame rules and text guides on verso. Staff gauge of 21-24 mm. One-staff capitals in red and blue, flourished in red and blue. Text script is gothica textualis quadrata, musical notation is Franconian.

II. HISTORY

No info. on music leaf. Formerly the rear pastedown in an unidentified binding probably from the Clare College Fellow's Library. Removed in the 20th century and preserved in a guard book in the Fellow's Library; transferred to the College Archives in 1988.

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

Parchment bifolium opened flat, trimmed at the bottom and on the right, and inserted sideways to serve as a rear flyleaf, plus additional stubs and strips. Each folio originally measured perhaps ca. 340 x 265 mm, now trimmed in height to 305 mm, while the second page has been cut away along the outer margin to a width of 159 mm; original written space of ca. 270 x 180 mm ruled in twelve red five-line staves, with staff gauge 14-15.5 mm. The four pages are paginated 547, 548, 557, 558, indicating two interior bifolio are missing from the original gathering structure. Additional small fragments presumably from the same music manuscript are used as binding material in the present host. Notation is a square mensural notation of the second half of the 13th century with paired semibreves and c.o.p. ligatures. Red and blue initials. Texts in English and Anglo-Norman.

II. HISTORY

No info. on music leaves, which judging from their pagination came from a very large ms of diverse contents. The host ms of 270 folios is an early 14th-century copy of the Speculum historiale, books 1-14, of Vincent of Beauvais.

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

Two parchment folios, now ca. 215 x 290 mm but cut down from an original of ca. 400 x 300 mm, possibly from a rotulus; each side ruled for music in two columns of red five-line staves, of which eight and a fraction are visible while at least eleven were originally drawn; written space originally ca. 333 x 260 mm, with each column ca. 333 x 125 mm and staff gauge 14 mm. Incomplete notation includes text and music on recto of fol. 1, and text only on recto of fol. 2. The versos were ruled for music but lack text or notation. Musical notation not Petronian, as stated in RISM, but a mixture of sections with square breve in long-breve motion and English paired rhomboid breves in long-breve-breve motion.

II. HISTORY

No info. on music leaves. Formerly front and rear flyleaves of the first item in Cgc 327/527, an early 13th-century copy of the Summa Ottonis Papiensis de edendo (incomplete) and the Summa Brocardi.

IV. CONTENTS

1. Equitas in curia subrogatur

fol. 1; conductus a3 written in parts; ed. PMFC XIV, no. App. 10, Anderson edn., vol. 9, no. O43

2. Fulget ecclesia prelatis singulis

fol. 2; staves drawn and text underlaid for a single-texted work a3 written in parts, of which texts of Triplum and Motetus are mostly preserved

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

Four flyleaves and 33 strips comprising all or part of twelve folios and including all or part of seven conductus for three voices (nos. 1-5, 8-9), plus staves and text but no musical notation for two others on the flyleaves (nos. 6-7), and eight for two voices (nos. 10-17) on the strips. Only six folios, C-H, are continuous. The front flyleaves (now fols. 1a-1c), with conductus a3, and the strips, with conductus a2, appear to be from different gatherings of the same manuscript and will be identified here as fragment A. This repertoire is primarily international in circulation. Fol. 2, originally the back flyleaf, may be from a different source than the others (Losseff (1994), 26), although evidence of sewing holes may indicate that it comes from a later layer of the same ms as the conductus (Fenlon (1982), 51). It contains distinctively insular genres and notation, and will be identified here as fragment B.

Fragment A

Overall dimensions ca. 295 x 227 mm, with written space of ca. 215 x 150 mm for the polyphony a3 and 205 x 150 mm for the polyphony a2, staff gauge ca. 14 mm. Items 1-9 are ruled in four systems of three red five-line staves per page; items 10-17 are ruled in five systems of two red five-line staves per page. Notre-Dame style music notation, with red-blue initials.

Fragment B

Recto ruled in four three-stave systems of red five-line staves; verso ruled in five similar three-stave systems. Written space of the recto is 220 x 160 mm (extended to 190 mm in the bottom system), and of the verso is 260 x 160 mm. Freely drawn staves of gauge ca. 12.5-15 mm. Musical notation is English mensural notation with rhomboid breves, predominantly in long-breve motion.

II. HISTORY

No info. on music leaves. From Bury St. Edmunds? They were front and rear flyleaves and binding strips removed in 1955 from Cjec 1, a 15th-century paper manuscript of 273 folios containing a miscellany of letters and documents from Bury St. Edmunds. The musical materials were first reassembled by Manfred Bukofzer. Best available description of the music leaves is in Fenlon (1982).

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

Two parchment bifolia, now unfolded and used as rear flyleaves (fols. 138 [a, b] and 139 [c, d]); not apparently contiguous or forming the center of a gathering; overall unfolded dimensions ca 292 x 170 mm. Thus, parts of eight pages survive, but they have been cut across the middle with the loss of the top half, and with the first (left) folio trimmed vertically down to a stub; width of original folio ca. 221/237 mm, with width of written space ca. 167/175 mm. Only four-and-a-half red five-line staves per page survive, all ruled in single columns of staff gauge 16/18/21 mm. If the original was ruled for nine staves, the height of the page would have been originally ca. 340 mm and the height of the written space ca. 260 mm. Source consisted of motets and motet-like troped chant settings in parts, some in single column format and some laid out in double-column format. Tenor text in red.

II. HISTORY

No info on music leaves. Written for Durham? Host manuscript of 139 fols. is a noted Gradual (cantatorium) of Durham Cathedral variously dated from ca. 1300 to ca. 1500.

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

Single leaf, probably a page from a rotulus, once folded to form two rear musical flyeaves (fols. 127-128) but now housed separately, unfolded and flattened, in a brown manila folder. The recto is ruled in two columns, each of width 85 mm and staff gauge 13 mm with fifteen fully visible red five-line staves; a partially visible sixteenth staff mostly trimmed from the top completes the upper two voices. A seventeenth staff is partially visible below the left hand column only and has no notation. The verso has fifteen complete staves with another partially trimmed away; the small amount surviving from its first item indicates that there was at least one preceding leaf to the rotulus. On both sides, the written space for 16 staves was originally ca. 315 x 180 mm inside overall dimensions of ca. 350 x 240 mm; overall dimensions are now 310 x 210 mm. The recto is finished with blue and red initials, while the verso is unfinished: the second item lacks initials and notation for the French-texted triplum. Notation is EMN.

II. HISTORY

No info. on music leaves. Written for Bury St. Edmunds? Former host manuscript of 125 fols. is a 13th-century copy of William Perardus, Summa de vitiis, in its original binding, with a Bury St. Edmunds pressmark.

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

Two parchment bifolia, neither the center of a gathering; evidently from the same source but with no continuity from one to the next; foliated I-II, 215-216 [229-230]; page dimensions 225 x 165 mm, with written space of 158 x 102 mm ruled in six systems per page of two red five-line staves with staff gauge 9 mm and red-blue initials. Notation is EMN in virga-rhomb patterns.

II. HISTORY

No info. on music leaves. Probably from Ely Cathedral Priory. Host manuscript of 256 fols. consists of a calendar and two late 12th-century volumes from Ely, the Liber Eliensis and the Inquisicio Eliensis, bound together. The music leaves serve as flyleaves before and after the first of these volumes and evidently served previously as flyleaves and pastedowns when it was independent. The two books were probably joined by the 15th century, when they received a continuous foliation which does not include the preceding calendar; the present binding is of the 17th or 18th century. Best available description in Fenlon (1982), 44.

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

Two parchment front flyleaves, from the same ms but not originally contiguous; overall dimensions 290 x 205 mm with written space of 179 x 121 mm (172 x 122, acc. Ludwig) ruled in twelve red five-line staves of staff gauge 8 mm. Initials in red, blue, green, and violet. Notre Dame style musical notation.

II. HISTORY

No info. on music leaves. From Bury? Lütolf argues for French provenance. Host manuscript of 96 fols. is a 15th-century collection of documents from Bury St. Edmunds, the Red Vestry Register, Part I, running from Richard II to Henry VI.

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

Single parchment leaf with no foliation; originally ca. 280 x 180 mm, now 280 x 125 mm, with three tabs extending a further 15 mm horizontally; written space arr. as single column now 245 x 125 mm (recto) for twelve five-line staves and 225 x 125 mm (verso) for eleven five-line staves, perhaps originally 245 x 150 mm (recto); staves freely ruled in red, with text guides, and staff gauge 13.5 mm. Notation in black; designations of untexted voices in red. Text script is gothica textualis quadrata, with some semi-quadrata elements; notation is Franconian, with ornamental semibreves.

II. HISTORY

Leaf now lost. Written for Canterbury? Used in an unidentified tall stabbed binding, probably from a codex in the Canterbury Cathedral Library or Archive.

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

Two separated fragments, discovered at separate times in the later 20th century, together comprising one parchment leaf; the larger, first reported by Sandon, has modern foliations "Cant 1" and "10"; Sandon's description reverses recto and verso. Originally ca. 300 x 200 mm, now 245 x 190 mm, with written space 244 x 155 mm; ruled in four three-staff systems with frame rules, double text guides, and ruled three-line 16 mm indentations for initials; red five-line staves freely ruled with gauge ca. 13 mm. Music that would have completed no. 1 not added to bottom system of recto and the badly worn, partially cut off, top system of verso. Three-line initial for S [alve] of item 2 in red, green, and brown; text gaps filled by red-green ornament. Two text hands, both versions of gothica textualis semiquadrata; musical notation is EMN with rhomboid breves and diagonal stems on the first rhombs of conjuncturae.

II. HISTORY

No info. on music leaf. Written for Canterbury? Fragments were formerly pastedowns in unidentified bindings probably from the Canterbury Cathedral Library or Archive; Wathey dates s. xiii 2/2; Sandon dates repertoire stylistically to mid-century, placing handwriting and notation both ca. 1260-1280.

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

Single parchment leaf with notation only on recto (verso is blank), possibly part of a rotulus, with at least three staves and two lines of text cut away at the top; modern foliation "Cant 6" on verso; now 250 x 196 mm, perhaps originally 325-360 x 190-200 mm; written space now 235 x 164 mm, perhaps originally 300 x 164 mm; eleven (originally at least fourteen) five-line staves freely-ruled in a single column with frame rules, double text guides, ruled indentations for initials, and staff gauge of 11-13 mm. Staves, paraps, and tenor text in red. Text script is gothica textualis rotunda; musical notation is Franconian.

II. HISTORY

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

Two frag. parchment folios forming a bifolium not from the center of a gathering; no surviving foliation (Wathey's foliation for RISM, followed here, reverses that of Bent); dimensions of two-page opening now 142 x 275 mm; each folio originally ca. 160 x 140 mm with written space ca. 120 x 100 mm; free-ruled in single columns, perhaps originally with twelve four-line staves per page on fols 1v-2v; fol. 1 organized into six two-staff systems, the first of which has one five-line staff; gauge of 4-line staves is 6-7 mm, that of five-line staff is 9.5 mm. Staves are red; major initial in red flourished with green, small capitals in red and green. Text script is an English proto-gothic book hand (miniscule with certain gothic forms), and notation is of the later 12th or early 13th century, with semi-quadratic neumes.

II. HISTORY

No info. on music leaves. Found in a cavity in the wall of the 15th-century clock chamber of Netherbury Church, Dorset, in 1964; deposited in Dorset Record Office in 1969.

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

Single leaf, originally ca. 300 x 200 cm, now trimmed on three sides to 260 x 179 mm; original written space ca. 268 x 162 mm with five-line staves of gauge 16 mm; ruled on recto in four three-staff systems, of which top staff is lost; ruled on verso for 10 staves, of which top staff is lost. Illuminated capitals in motet; different colored inks (blue, red, brown) for texts in rondellus segments.

II. HISTORY

No info. on music leaf, which has two pieces on St. Peter. Binding material from a printed book, Hygden's Polycronycon (London: Wynkyn de Worde, 1495). Now a front flyleaf but not originally so; perhaps once reinforcement for the spine. Present binding, not original, is ca. 1545 and not London work; some early owners lived in Norwich. Provenance of music could be either city (see Losseff (1994)).

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

Mutilated and incomplete parchment codex now of 170 folios with dimensions of 288 x 185 mm and a written space of 240-245 x 165 mm. Plainsong and polyphony written on 17 to 19 red four-line staves per page of gauge 8 mm. Polyphony on fol. 14, not 14 verso as described in RISM.

II. HISTORY

Polyphony entered among plainsongs in the Temporale of this Sarum Antiphonal from ca. 1300, perhaps from York.

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

Overall dimensions of 207 x 150 mm; written space for music on fols. 153-155 is ca. 180-190 x 115-25 mm, in a variety of hands and rulings with staff gauge ca. 7-7.5 mm. On fol. 201v, written space is 180 x 115 mm with staff gauge 6 mm (15 mm for the two-staff system).

II. HISTORY

A theological and moral miscellany variously dated late 13th century (Dobson in MES) or early 14th century (Stevens). It is a composite of four parchment mss, fols. 1-94; 95-133; 134-35; 136-201. Music, all in the fourth discrete ms, entered within an integral binio, fols. 152-55, plus later entries. Middle English dialects have both East Anglian and Northern features. Malyshko (1989: 72, 81) suggests Leeds as a possible point of origin, since a later owner was of the parish of Leeds.

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

Overall ms dimensions are 212 x 115 mm, but the gathering containing the music is shorter, at 200 x 115 mm; written space of music pages is 180 x 103-107 mm, with six pairs of four-line brown staves per page of gauge 10 mm. Early 13th-century notation similar to British Library manuscripts Cotton Vesp. xviii, Harley 524, and Harley 5393. The two items are entered in different hands.

II. HISTORY

MS of 24 folios is a 12th-13th century collection of short theological works that originally belonged to Cistercian abbey of Thame, Oxfordshire. Music and text added on the final leaves of a gathering given over to De diluvia. Fol. 16v has 12 lines of unrelated written text in yet another, later hand.

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

Parchment leaf of polyphony now fol. 36 in a 19th-century miscellany of fragments of burnt Cotton manuscripts. Heat has distorted and shrunk the parchment to current dimensions of ca. 190 x 135 mm. Shrinkage and warping on account of the Cotton fire make a fair estimate of original dimensions impossible. Notation is EMN.

II. HISTORY

Leaf apparently was a flyleaf in Cotton Titus A. xviii, an early 14th-century Durham miscellany of 85 folios and dimensions 240 x 165 mm that survives in very good shape. The leaf is dated 1349 in a document added at the bottom of the recto; leaf probably from Adel (Addle in Yorkshire).

2. Angelus ad virginem subintrans fol. 36v; setting a2 with tune in top voice; not concordant to a later polyphonic setting a3 of the same text and tune in Cambridge, University Library, Additional 710 (an error in RISM repeated in Anderson edn., vol. 9, pp. 126-27 in the commentary to no. O13, and elsewhere); ed. MES, no. 15 (ii) with substitute text (Gabriel Fram Heven-King), PMFC XVII, no. 17

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

MS dimensions are 235 x 160 mm; music added on originally blank rearmost pages, fols. 90v-91, in written space 178 x 115 mm (fol. 90v) and 170 x 125 mm (fol. 91) on twelve and nine freely-drawn four-line staves per page, respectively, of staff gauge 7-10 mm. RISM errs in assigning item no. 1 to page 90 recto.

II. HISTORY

Ms of 91 fols. is a parchment collection of psalm and hymn texts of the late 12th or early 13th century. Provenance might be French or English, but the present consensus is that the music, at any rate, is an English addition. The same hand entered the text and lowest musical part on fol. 90v and the text and music of fol. 91; the upper two polyphonic voices on fol. 90v, for which space had been saved, were then added in another hand.

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

MS dimensions are 215 x 160 mm; music added on blank flyleaves at end of main corpus in written space 179 x 125 mm ruled for thirteen red staves on fol. 164v (one five-line and twelve four-line) and twelve on fol. 165 (ten four-line and two five-line) with staff gauge 9 mm for five lines (7 mm for four lines). Musical notation is EMN in long-rhomb motion. Some aspects of early 13th-century notation (e.g., double longs divided by vertical line; one or two dots over some single longs) are most similar to British Library manuscripts Burney 357, Harley 524, or Harley 5393. Decoration in red and green. Lots of erasures, perhaps either amending clef errors or recording the process of scribal conversion from continental notation to EMN.

II. HISTORY

13th century MS of 167 folios from Ramsey Abbey. Miscellaneous contents include chronicles and Papal bulls; originally at least two separate mss now joined. Leaves containing the music once may have been independent of the remainder, as fols. 163 and 165 form a bifolio, with fol. 164 now a single leaf within it whose musical content continues onto fol. 165, and fol. 163 recto is blank.

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

MS dimensions are 207 x 150 mm; music in top half (98 x 115 mm) of a ruled written space of 148 x 115 mm, on three systems of two red four-line staves of gauge 8 mm. Notation includes an ascending binary ligature whose lower note is a wavy duplex long and a descending binary ligature whose first note is a duplex longa over which are two dots. Early 13th-century notation is most similar to British Library manuscripts Burney 357, Cotton Vespasian A. xviii, or Harley 5393. Red decoration on initials.

II. HISTORY

MS of 147 fols. is a miscellaneous collection of once independent libelli including sermons and other theological items. The last of these is a letter from the Abbot of Oseney to the Bishop of Lincoln, ca. 1300-1320. Music entered on a ruled but blank endleaf of one of these items.

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

A smallish book of 162 folios, originally ca. 200 x 135 mm, now trimmed at the margins to 190 x 130 mm, with a written space of 163 x 102 mm (sometimes taller) for fols. 2-13v; staff gauge is 11-12.5 mm for five lines. Item A comprises the entire first section. Folio one is blank. Fols. 2r-13v have uniform ruling of nine red five-line staves per page with the exception of 9v-10 (four three-staff systems of 4, 5, 5 lines for item no. 9), 11 (only ruled for 5 staves, to the end of the piece), 11v (for item no. 12). Notation is EMN with rhomboid breve; it has evidently undergone some modifications at a later time.

Item B, fols. 14r-15r begins the second section of the book and is ruled differently for its music theory examples; written space is 143-152 x 80-85 mm.

Item C, the appended fols. 160v-161, has a written space of 141 x 115 mm.

II. HISTORY

This is a Reading Abbey ms principally from the mid 13th century and finished not long after 1265. It is a portable miscellany originally in six distinct sections of widely varying content, but with uniform size and mostly uniform written space and ruling of pages. Perhaps compiled for Reading monk William of Winchester. The music is in the first section (fols. 2r-13v), and includes nine lengthy monophonic Latin songs, plus polyphony (Sumer canon, three-voice motet as conductus, three dances a2). There are music theory examples at the beginning of the second section (fols. 14r-15r).

The last item added to the manuscript is a later addition, a single bifolium which preserves the index or table of contents to a now lost music codex of c. 1290 that was evidently also of Reading provenance, the so-called LoHa or Harleian index (fols. 160v-161). It records that the lost book was once owned and perhaps assembled by W. de Wintonia (a monk at Reading and at Leominster Priory, a Reading dependency, in the 1270s and 1280s), and identifies a work by R. de Burgate (abbot of Reading, 1268-90) and a cycle of Alleluia settings attributed to W. de Wycombe (a Reading monk who also worked at Leominster Priory for four years and was precentor there for part or all of that time, in the later 1270s).

Item C

Index or table of contents for a lost volume of polyphony, fols. 160v-161; there are incipits for 164 items; the layout in sections with headings is original, but the running numeration given below is modern; a number of the textual incipits can be associated with possible concordances, as noted; possibles tend to group in certain of the sections, while other sections, including what are called in the index the conductus, apparently consist entirely or mostly of unica; see Lefferts (1986), 161-65, Sanders (2001e), Losseff, 67-69.

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

Two groups of three small fragments each, once used as binding strips but now removed and mounted between two clear plastic sheets; they appear to be from the same music source. The three horizontal strips, when joined together, form a fragment ca. 75 mm x 225 mm from the bottom of a bifolium (fols. 1-2); estimating twelve red five-line staves to the page, the later 13th-century original may have been over 330 x 180 mm with written space ca. 300 x 160 mm and staff gauge 15-16 mm. Item no. 1 is clearly a later addition of the 14th century with brown staves and a different hand and ink. The remaining three small vertical strips comprising fol. 3 are believed to come from the same leaf since their hands are very similar and their versos are blank; two can be joined to form a fragment 73 x 48 mm, while the third measures 74 x 24 mm. Music notation is Franconian long-breve motion with square breves. The verso of fol. 3 is blank.

II. HISTORY

No info. on music fragments. Former host ms is a 15th-century paper ms (English?) of 215 x 150 mm containing the Gesta Romanorum. Fragments were removed in a 1966 rebinding.

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

Codex originally ca. 250 x 180, now 217 x 159 mm, with a written space for the music of 179 x 130-55 mm on fol. 80v; nine red four- and five-line staves with gauge 7-17 mm roughly drawn in a single column in three systems of three staves each, with text guides. Text script is protogothic with strong documentary influence. Musical notation is of the earliest 13th century, like British Library manuscripts Burney 357, Cotton Vespasian A. xviii, and Harley 524.

II. HISTORY

Music has been added on the last page (fol. 80v) of a discrete parchment booklet (76 fols., foliated 5-80) that is the first of two now bound together in this volume. The MS, of possible Lincolnshire provenance, consists of this booklet (a glossed Gospel concordance s. xii/xiii) and an Evangelium per totum Adventum legenda. These were associated by the 15th century. Given to the British Museum by Edward Harley, Earl of Oxford, in 1753.

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

Three parchment fragments located at different places in the same modern compilation, representing leaves from two different medieval sources, identified in the following as A and B.

Fragment A

Fol. 22, a single parchment leaf originally ca. 370 x 240 mm with wide margins, now trimmed at the top and right to 305 x 190-195 mm. Loss of music and text only about the depth of an initial vertically, and most of the topmost staff horizontally. Written space of ca. 268 x 140 mm ruled for twelve red five-line staves of gauge 14 mm, of which eleven staves and a fraction are visible. Musical notation is EMN. Blue initials ca. 20 mm wide set into one-staff indents of ca. 10 mm.

Fragment B

Two parchment fragments now bound as fols. 32 and 65. Together they form top left and right parts of one folio, with missing center. Similar size---137 x 68 mm (fol. 32) and 138 x 73 mm (fol. 65)---suggests the original leaf was cut and trimmed to serve as front and rear flyleaves in the same small unidentified ms. Projecting from the assumption of 12 red five-line staves per page of gauge 12 mm, the original written space was ca. 210-215 mm tall. Estimating from the tenor repetitions and upper voice gaps in item 1, the width of written space was ca. 125 mm. Overall the leaf would originally have been ca. 250 x 160 mm or larger. Items all begin with letter B, suggesting alphabetical arrangement; items 3 and 4 have original numerations X and XI. Musical notation is EMN. Elaborately flourished and painted two- and four-stave initials in red and blue, indented ca. 20 mm. The contents description reverses RISM's recto and verso.

II. HISTORY

No info. on music leaves. Present location is a 20th-century compilation of odd parchment fragments mostly of music. Fragment A is of the late 13th or early 14th century. Fragment B is evidently earlier.

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

MS dimensions 167 x 114 mm; polyphony in written block 126-130 x 80-88 mm ruled for six freely-drawn accolades of two four-line brown staves of gauge 7 mm.

II. HISTORY

Host ms of 189 fols. is a miscellany of the 13th century, containing principally sermons. Music, mainly monophonic sequences, added in various hands to empty fols., primarily to fols. 143v-147v; none in same hand as Verbum celo.

IV. CONTENTS

1. Verbo celum quo firmatur

fol. 156v-157v; sequence a2 headed De resurrectione; ed. PMFC XIV, no. 5, Gillingham edn., no. 11

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

Ms dimensions of 195 x 133 mm with written space for music on recto of 161-72 x 102-07 mm, ruled in five freely-drawn accolades of 8-9 lines each on the recto and six accolades of 8-11 lines each on the verso; staff gauge for 5 lines is ca. 10-12 mm. Erasure of all material on the verso.

II. HISTORY

Three manuscripts of English origin bound together (ff. 1-132, 133-192, 193-254); perhaps once at Westminster Abbey. The music was added on both pages of the final (blank) folio at the end of the second part, a parchment ms of sermons in French and Latin dating to ca. 1200. RISM identifies the legible music as a sequence (no. 1), a responsory trope (no. 3), and two Agnus tropes (nos. 2 and 4); possibly all items were intended as Agnus tropes.

5. Illegible music a2 under palimpsest, probably one additional piece
fol. 192v

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

Single damaged parchment bifolium, not the center of a gathering, that was bound sideways to form the rear pastedown of MS 752; the surviving fragment now raised to form fol. 51, with a preceding unfoliated stub; further, there are offsets on the front binding board from an additional bifolium once used as a pastedown but now lost, that originally was adjacent to and nested within the surviving bifolium. (The offsets are not reproduced here.) Probably nine or twelve red five-line staves, of which eight survive; now 170 x 237 mm for the double leaf but originally each folio ca. 190 x 134 mm, with written space ca. 131 x 104 mm (estimating twelve staves to the page) and staff gauge 10-13 mm; freely-ruled in two-staff systems with frame rules, double text guides, and ruled indentations of ca. 10 mm for initials. Red and blue plain capitals with red and blue flourishing. Text hand is gothica textualis rotunda, and musical notation is of Notre-Dame type.

II. HISTORY

No info. on music leaf. Host manuscript is a late 13th-century copy of Vegetius, De re militari, covered in what is probably the original binding of s. xiii/xiv. No trace of ownership before ca. 1700. Possibly donated by Sir Charles Cotterell in the mid 1680s to the library founded by Thomas Tenison (Archbishop of Canterbury, 1694-1715) at St. Martin's Lane, London.

offset on front board-Br; conductus a2 (Anderson cat., no. G1; Falck, no. 26; Szöverffy, 65); ed. Anderson edn., vol. 3, no. G1

4. Hec est rosa

Br-v; conductus a2, second strophe of Ortu regis evanescit, here as a separate piece (Anderson cat., no. G3; Falck, no. 256; Szöverffy, 236); facs. Wathey, pl. 19; ed. Anderson edn., vol. 3, no. G3

5. [Pa]ter noster qui [es in celis]

Bv; frag. conductus a2 (Anderson cat., no. G2; Falck, no. 265; Szöverffy, 263); facs. Wathey, pl. 19; ed. Anderson edn., vol. 3, no. G2

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

Two parchment strips forming one frag. folio; now 130 x 205 mm, originally ca. 430 x 260 mm, assuming twelve five-line staves to the page; present dimensions of written space 130 x 180 mm, originally ca. 370 x 185 mm; rastrum-ruled in single column, with mix of single staves and two-staff systems, with frame rules and double text guides; staff gauge 18.5 mm; staves in red, text of tenor in red, major initials in gold, blue, and red. Text script is gotthica textualis sine pedibus, with some semi-quadrata elements; music notation is English, late ars antiqua binary mensuration.

II. HISTORY

Music written in England. Formerly used as flyleaves at each end of Gal. G. 4. 29, a printed book (Paris, 1552) received by the Abbey library in 1584 as a bequest from the collection of William Latymer; this book is now bound in what might be a standard Westminster Abbey design of s. xvi/xvii.

2. ...-tem hominum a maligno spiritu/T. Spiritus et alme orphanorum verso; frag. troped Gloria trope a3; two voices in score followed by tenor

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

Two parchment folios, forming a bifolium not from the center of a gathering; now (and perhaps originally) 490 x 345 mm; written space 400 x 250-55 mm for thirteen staves, or 365 x 250-55 mm for twelve red five-line staves of staff gauge 20 mm; upper parts of motets ruled in double columns, with tenor and quartus cantus ruled across the entire page. Fols. 1r and 2r bear the heading "quadruplices" in red. Item nos. 2, 3, 6, 7, 8 (and probably originally item 5, i.e., all items beginning on these leaves) have "cor" in the l.h. margin next to them. This may indicate choral performance, or else be some kind of indication to the decorator for the gold leaf initials, directly adjacent, that begin one upper voice in each motet. Other initials, and further decoration of gold initials, in red, blue, and green. Items 2 and 6 have work numbers 25 and 37 in the l.h. margin, respectively, implying that a single missing bifolium---the center of the gathering---nested between these folios; by projection, the original fascicle may have consisted of eight nested bifolia and 64 or more motets. The musical notation is Franconian.

II. HISTORY

No info. on music leaves. Written for Westminster Abbey? Formerly the cover for MS 33327, which contains Abbey accounts dated from 29 September 1516 to 24 June 1517 headed by the name John Campyon. Preserved with Abbey muniments since that time.

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

Two parchment flyleaves once glued to the front and rear covers, foliated 1 and 195, each a flattened bifolium not the center of a gathering, and not contiguous; trimmed at the top and inserted sideways; traces of music are still visible on the boards. Page size was originally ca. 320 x 215 mm, now 291 x 212 mm, with written space 225 x 142 mm and staff gauge 13 mm; layout in single columns with four groups of three brown staves each. Initials in red and blue. Gothic text hand. Musical notation of Notre Dame type, with virga and rhomboid breve to indicate long-short rhythms in no. 2.

II. HISTORY

No info. on music leaves. From Reading? Host ms of 195 fols. is a 13th-century parchment ms of Augustine's Commentary on the Psalms from Reading Abbey, presented to the Bodleian in 1608 with a sister ms, Bodley 241. Ms covered in a Reading binding of ca. 1500.

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

Seven small parchment fragments comprising parts of two or more leaves (frags. 1-3 form fol. A; frags. 5-6 form fol. B; frag. 4 possibly from fol. B; frag. 7 illegible), formerly used as binding material in the spine of the present host MS. Four further strips remain embedded and have not been removed. No fragment is now larger than 85 x 60 mm, and no estimate can be made of the original size of leaf or written space. Ruled in red five-line staves with gauge 12-14 mm and ruled two-stave indentations of 12 mm for initials. Text script is gothica textualis semi-quadrata; musical notation is basically Franconian, using unstemmed semibreves and dots of division.

II. HISTORY

No info. on music leaves. Written in England for Canterbury Christ Church? Present host ms was at Canterbury Christ Church by the early 14th century, and the current binding was probably made at Canterbury between 1450 and 1480. Given to the Bodleian Library in 1616 by Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob Colfe.

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

Polyphony on fol. x verso is written in double columns on sixteen red-four line staves. Overall page dimensions 308 x 200 mm, with written space 232 x 147-54 mm and staff gauge 7-9 mm; alternating red and green initials. Notation is unmeasured square-headed longs and rounded, almost rhomboid, breves.

II. HISTORY

Host manuscript is of the second half of the 12th century, containing homilies in Old English and Latin, with later additions. Manuscript of over 200 fols. It has seven distinct sections, each ending with blank space before the next begins again with a fresh quire. Unrelated music was later added at the end of the first section (one monophonic sequence on fol. x and one polyphonic sequence on fol. x verso) and at the end of the fourth (one monophonic sequence). The monophony is not reproduced here. Ms given to the Bodleian by Sir Robert Cotton in 1603.

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

In an attempt to reassemble in one place as much surviving material as possible from two or more dismembered music codices, this source was created out of fifteen leaves removed from the bindings of three medieval manuscripts (eight from Oxford, Bodleian Library, ms. Auct. f. inf. i. 3; six from Oxford, Bodleian Library, ms. Bodley 862, and one from Oxford, Bodleian Library, ms. Hatton 30), together with photographs of leaves preserved in other places. Offsets from Bodley 862 remain in that manuscript. Recent discoveries of additional pertinent material render this factitious assembly of material out-of-date. See Reconstructions I, II, and III below.

II. HISTORY

Assembled in the Bodleian Library between 1925 and 1952.

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

Eight parchment leaves. Seven of these, fols. 79-85, were removed from ms Bodley 816, where they were front and rear flyleaves (fols. i-iii and 197-200); they appear to be from two sources (designated A and B below). The eighth is an unrelated single leaf, fol. 104 (designated C below).

Fragment A

Fols. 82-85 are two nested bifolia from the center of a gathering (present dimensions: fol. 82, 247 x 86 mm; fol. 83, 272 x 193 mm; fol. 84, 272 x 53 mm; fol. 85, 247 x 190 mm), from a polyphonic Kyriale to which fol. 79, a single leaf (250 x 148 mm), also apparently belonged; they are ruled with nine freely drawn red five-line staves of gauge 18.5 mm in written space of ca. 240 x 154 mm within overall page ca. 280 x 190 mm; elaborate red-blue, one-staff initials are indented about 8.5 mm.

Fol. 80 is a single leaf, now 250 x 135 mm; recto ruled with eight freely drawn red five-line staves of gauge 22 mm; written space height is 240 mm; and a one-staff initial is indented about 6.3 mm. Though its ruling, decorative style, and text hand differ from those of the group just described, the similarity in content and in height of the written block suggest that this leaf may belong with them as well.

Fol. 80v, originally blank, has been notated in a much later hand with a setting in score from the mid-14th century; it has nine five-line staves arranged as three freely ruled three-staff systems with text underneath each; written space originally ca. 245 mm in height; each system of staves is about in 53-56 mm in height, with staff gauge of ca. 13.5-14.5 mm.

Fragment B

Fol. 81 is an unfolded fragment (252 x 135 mm overall) cut from the top of a single bifolium, probably the center of a gathering of a different, slightly smaller manuscript than Frag. A, with page dimensions ca. 250 x 180 and written space ca. 200 x 135 mm for nine staves, now trimmed to ca. 130 x 135 for six visible staves; fols. 81a recto and b verso were ruled for nine (now six) independent five-line staves of staff gauge 15.5 mm; fols 81a verso-b recto ruled for nine five-line staves arranged as three (now two) three-staff systems. Fol. 81a verso has a three-staff initial indented 8.5 mm.

Fragment C

Fol. 104 is a single parchment leaf trimmed at the top and now 127 x 160 mm, with freely-ruled red five-line staves of gauge 10-11 mm and width 130-134 mm (two six-line staves of gauge 13 mm on fol. 104v); originally about 300 x 170 mm with a written space of 175 x 134 mm on the recto, assuming an original with ten staves and generous margins. Text hand is gothica textualis quadrata and music hand is English Mensural Notation with rhomboid breve expressing second mode.

II. HISTORY

No info. on music leaves. Present host ms is a guardbook of musical fragments, some of which are medieval. Fols. 79-85 (frags. A and B) were flyleaves in Oxford, Bodleian Library, Bodley 816, a 14th-century English copy of the Epistolae or Dictamina of Petrus de Vineis (a volume authored in the second quarter of the 14th century that includes letters relating to Oxford). Fol. 104, written in England in the later 13th century, was formerly a flyleaf in some unknown volume; it was owned by Dr. A. Molloy, Southmoor, Abingdon, and was bought by the Bodleian Library on 5 June 1967.

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

Parchment flyleaves removed from Rawlinson C. 400, comprising fragments from three distinct sources---a booklet and two rotuli---identified as A, B, C below. Of these flyleaves, two bifolia and six scraps are in Ob 400*, and an additional fragment from Ob 400 is now Ob 19. All three sources are linked by text hands, a Gothica textualis semi-quadrata; musical notation is English Mensural Notation with rhomboid breves.

Fragment A

Not reproduced here; facs. of two pages in Dittmer (1954). Two bifolia now housed in ms C. 400*, from the center of a larger gathering, once used as front flyleaves in the host, with texts copied in a spacing that allowed for staves and music for six compositions, but the notation was never added; the pages are variously trimmed on all margins; now 192 x 150-155 mm, with orig. perhaps ca. 240 x 180 mm, with a written space of ca. 200 x 140 mm.

Fragment B

Four fragments in ms C. 400* (nos. 1-4 [DIAMM fols. 1-4]) measuring 140 x 125 mm, 155 x 135 mm, 165 x 96 mm, and 140 x 92 mm. Two of these, nos. 2 and 3, appear to be nearly contiguous. These are all from a rotulus of original dimensions at least ca. 775 x 155 mm with written space 134 mm wide and at least 40 free-ruled brown five-line staves of staff gauge 13.5-14 mm. Red five-line staves with black or red initials.

Fragment C

Three fragments, one in Lat. liturg. b. 19 (fol. 4) and two in ms C. 400* (frags. 5a and 6a [DIAMM fols. 9, 10]); the first of these measures 306 x 170 mm, and the latter two fragments measure 108 x 165 mm and 178 x 115 mm. These are from a rotulus of original dimensions about ca. 700 x 200 mm with written space ca. 630 x 165 mm, ruled in 36 freely drawn brown five-line staves of staff gauge 11-13 mm (no. 1 occupies 15 staves; the two voices in score of no. 2 occupy eight full staves grouped as four two-stave systems, and the following voice part occupies eleven full staves, followed by two empty staves). All three fragments preserve the right-hand margin of the written space. The dorse of this roll contains notes on the Tribunium of St. Anne, a draft office for St. Margaret, and documents concerning grain purchased at Reading and Wokingham.

II. HISTORY

Former host ms is a pontifical made for Roger de Mortival, bishop of Salisbury (1315-1330) and bequeathed to the Cathedral upon his death. Ob 19 removed in mid-19th century and rediscovered in 1982. Other binding fragments removed to Ob 400* in 1952. Music of item C written in England not after 1256. The music is from Reading Abbey or its dependency, Leominster Priory.

Fragment C

1. Mirabilis deus invisibilis-Mira federa mitis puerpera / Ave Maria / Ave Maria recto (Lat. liturg. b. 19, fol. 4); bipartite single-texted c.f. motet a3, possibly a troped chant setting of an Alleluia V. Ave Maria with two verses; textual concordance of second part to an entry in the LoHa index; facs. Barker-Benfield (1983); ed. Losseff (1994), 121-25
2. Descendit de celis recto (Lat. liturg. b. 19, fol. 4; Rawl. C. 400*, frags. 5a and 6a); frag. troped chant setting a3 of Christmas Matins responsory Descendit de celis V. Tanquam sponsus with two untroped voices in score (lowest one is c.f.) followed by a separate voice for entire setting, with troped text for Tanquam and Gloria patri melismas; facs. of frags. 5a and 6a in Dittmer (1954) following page 58, facs. of Ob 19 in Barker-Benfield (1983); partial eds. in Dittmer (1954), 55-58, Losseff (1994), 126

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

Host ms is 235 x 168 mm; music added in double-ruled written frame of 130 x 105 mm and staff gauge 12 mm (for five lines). Polyphonic alleluia is one of three in the same hand (the other two monophonic) on fols. 131v-132, followed by other monophony. Only the contents of 131v are recorded and reproduced here.

II. HISTORY

12th century parchment manuscript of 134 fols. Primary contents are a Martyrology from Lichfield diocese, perhaps St. Chad's, Shrewsbury. Entered the Bodleian in the Rawlinson bequest of 1756. Music at the beginning and end, in association with a calendar. At the front, leaves of plainsong before and after calendar; in rear leaves music, mainly monophonic, follows the calendar on fols. 127v-129v, 131v-134v.

IV. CONTENTS

1. Alleluia V. Ave dei genitrix Maria
fol. 131v; chant setting a2; ed. PMFC XIV, no. 62
2. Alleluia V. O vir magne pietatis
fol. 131v; monophonic, with 2 verses

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

MS dimensions are 163 x 112 mm, with written space for monophony on fol. 105v of 110 x 50 mm, and for polyphony on fol. 106v of 143 x 93 mm on five two-staff systems of red four-line staves of gauge 8 mm, in brown ink. Monophonic song and polyphony entered in same hand.

II. HISTORY

Benedictine psalter of 107 fols. in parchment of 2nd half of the 13th century, ca. 1265 (acc. MES) or early 13th century (Frere, BML), perhaps prepared at Canterbury, that passed to the Augustinian nunnery of Burnham, Bucks., in the late 13th or early 14th century. Music apparently added at the nunnery, as an addition at the end. Bequeathed to the Bodleian in 1755.

facs. EEH, pl. XXIII, EBM, Parrish, pl. XIX; ed. MES, no. 7

2. Mellis stilla maris stella rosa fol. 106v; c.f. motet a2, here presented as conductus in score with single text below staff system; tenor pitches have been divided for syllabic performance; frag. English concordance in Ccc 8 after fol. 256, and continental concordances in F-MO 32 (Rok 40), etc.; ed. PMFC XIV, no. App. 22

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

MS dimensions are 251 x 166 mm, with written space for polyphony of 167-186 x 122 mm, in three systems of three freely drawn red four-line staves of gauge 9 mm.

II. HISTORY

The polyphony is in the same hand as the remainder of the gathering of BVM sequences to which it belongs (fols. 68v-72v); that gathering is integral to a late 13th-century Sarum Gradual of 111 fols.

fol. 72v; monophonic Kyrie, not otherwise found in plainchant sources, but cf for two English discant settings of Kyrie (PMFC XVI, nos. 10 and 11); the Christe is a Benedicamus domino chant in Lbl Lansdowne 462, fol. 97v and is cf for a discant setting of Deo gracias (PMFC XVI, no. 72); facs. EECM 26, pl. 77, Summers (1983), pl. 174

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

Single parchment leaf inserted upside down as a front flyleaf; fol. 1v once fastened down to the front wooden cover, now unpasted but very damaged; a mirror image of the remains of the pastedown on the cover is preserved as Bodleian ms Fasc. d. 90, fol. 83. Size of host ms is 227 x 168 mm. Now 13 red four- or five-line staves per page visible, but trimmed at the top with loss of first three staves of no. 1, suggesting 16 or more staves; perhaps from a rotulus. Assuming 16 staves, flyleaf originally ca. 350 x 180 mm, with written space of ca. 306 x 150 mm ruled with gauge 13 mm. Music notation is EMN with rhomboid breve in virga-rhomb alternation and chains of rhombs.

II. HISTORY

Host is a 14th-century English parchment ms of 204 fols. whose principal contents are Johannes de Estemdene, Tractatus summe iudicialis de accidentibus mundi. RISM identifies the author as a former member of Merton College. RISM further says the present binding may be original, but also observes that there is a 15th century foliation indicating that this ms. was once part of a larger volume.

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

One of the most beautiful English sources. Four parchment leaves, trimmed at the top with slight loss of music and used as flyleaves; front flyleaves (bound upside down and reversed as flyleaves i, ii, now fols. 1-2) were conductus a3 and rear ones (iv-iii, now fols. 3-4) were conductus a2; leaves from rear are consecutive but ones from front are not; Losseff suggests the order of the first two should be 2v-2, 1v-1. Now 197 x 145 mm but perhaps originally 221 x 162 mm with a written space of 155 x 92 mm; fols. 1-2 ruled in four 15- or 16-line accolades of gauge 33 mm, each to be interpreted as a system of three red five- (or six-) line staves, with split into five-line staves in rondellus sections; fols. 3-4 have six continuous 10-line accolades of gauge ca. 20 mm, each to be interpreted as two five-line staves of gauge ca. 8 mm. The original music manuscript was very impressive, with gold initials and red-blue filigree for items 2, 4, 7, and blue initials with red filigree for the others. Musical notation is of Notre Dame type, with considerable rotation on some of the freestanding square breves or puncti, verging on rhomb shape in some cases.

II. HISTORY

Written in England. Formerly the flyleaves at each end of a printed book, The Pallace of Pleasure Beautified by William Painter (London, 1569), once apparently owned by Edw. Ferrers, who scribbled his name all over it. Ferrers is evidently a late 16th-century figure, judging by the many dates he added during the reign of Elizabeth I; he may have been the one to have had this book bound. Music leaves discovered in 1954 and rebound as ff. 1-4.

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

Overall dimensions of hos ms are 199 x 135 mm. The polyphony is added in a written space of 162 x 114 mm on three staves, the first of eight lines and the subsequent two of six lines. Notation is EMN with long-short alternation of virgas and rhombs.

II. HISTORY

Host is a late 13th-century codex of 120 fols. from the Augustinian priory of Llanthony Maior in Gloucestershire, compiled from two once-independent 13th-century manuscripts containing the Anticlaudianus of Alanus of Lille plus later entries (fols. 1-71) and a glossed De consolatione philosophie of Boethius plus later entries (fols. 72-120). Additions to the first include Recitemus pro hec festa, a double-texted monophonic sequence for Kyneburg, a local Gloucester saint, on fol. 68. Among the additions to the second are a polyphonic devotional song in the vernacular and a monophonic Marian sequence. One of other the later entries is datable after 1275, and another after 1273 or perhaps 1289. Music and lyrics possibly composed or copied by the master of the priory grammar school.

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

Parchment bifolium, not the center of a gathering; now 226 x 155 mm, but originally ca. 245 x 155 mm, with written space 187 x 122 mm and staff gauge ca. 9.5-10.5 mm; twelve red five-line staves per page, with initials in red or blue. Blue-green, red, and brown-black text of rondellus in no. 1, not unlike coloring of rondellus texts in DRu 13. Notation of Notre Dame type, but with occasional virgas and rhombs for long-short rhythms.

fol. 2v; RISM no. 4; frag. conductus a3 (Anderson cat., no. O19, Szöverffy, 329); ed. Anderson edn., vol. 9, no. O17

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

Seven parchment leaves trimmed to various sizes: fol. 1, 262 x 21 mm, fol. 2, 283 x 211 mm, fol. 3, 284 x 152 mm, fol. 4, 282 x 154 mm, fol. 5, 277 x 191 mm, fol. 6, 276 x 194 mm, fol. 7, 281 x 136 mm. Leaf one is a narrow vertical strip whose recto is actually a verso, and vice versa. It apparently belongs before fol. 2, since it contains Kyrie prosula settings, but does not appear to immediately precede the other leaves. Leaves 2-7 are three contiguous bifolia missing the center of the gathering, hence the break between fol. 4 and fol. 5. Originally ca. 290 x 220 mm with written space 178 x 143 mm and staff gauge 9-10 mm, in four accolades of three red five-line staves per page, with additions in the lower margins of fols. 3v-4 and 5v-6 on brown, four- or five-line staves. In the conductus, notation is Notre Dame style but with the use of virga and rhomb for long-short rhythms. In the motet additions, notation is EMN. Compositions a3 in score begin with red and blue three-stave initials.

II. HISTORY

No info. on music leaves. Formerly flyleaves in Corpus Christi College, 86, a 14th-century British ms of 239 fols. in a 16th-century binding. That ms is a miscellany containing Aesop's Fables, Adelard of Bath's De causis naturalium compositorum, etc. The leaves were removed in 1938 and put into their present order in 1952.

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

Single parchment leaf, the first front flyleaf in the present host ms, unnumbered; now cut away by more than half vertically to 273 x 94 mm, with written space 230 mm in height; judging by comparable sources, original may have been ca. 280 x 200 mm with written space ca. 230 x 150 mm. Twelve red, five-line staves arr. in single column as six two-stave accolades with gauge 12 mm within double frame rule. Text hand is anglicana and music notation is EMN.

II. HISTORY

No info. on music leaf. Host is an English ms of 225 fols. in parchment compiled by one John Sheppey; a 14th-century note states that it was a gift of William Reed, bishop of Chichester (1368-85).

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

Fragmentary parchment leaf, formerly two strips from the binding of the present host book, where they were used as guards for the first and last quires; now joined and foliated v. Originally taller, ca. 275 mm, with width greater than 200 mm, now 240 x 100 mm; written space, ca. 215 mm high, freely ruled in twelve red five-line staves of gauge 11.5-13 mm in a single column with frame rules on recto. Text script is an informal gothica textualis rotunda, with two hands, one for recto and the second for verso; musical notation is basically Franconian, with unstemmed semibreves and dots of division; downward stems added later to semibreves in no. 1.

II. HISTORY

No info. on music leaf. Written for Canterbury Christ Church? Present host book was printed at Lyons in 1497 and was owned by a monk of Christ Church, Canterbury. Given to Wisbech Town Library by ca. 1660. Rebound in the 18th and 20th centuries.

4. . . . de mon cr . . . s voy bone
fol. v verso, staves 9-12; single voice, tenor to no. 3?

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

Single parchment leaf ca. 350 x 230 mm, damaged on inner edge so perhaps originally ca. 10 mm or more wider. Palimpsest over earlier music, with written space 260 x 173 mm on recto and 270 x 175 mm on verso ruled in twelve red five-line staves of staff gauge 17 mm. Recto has decoration in black and red; verso in different hand with red, blue, and turquoise decoration.

II. HISTORY

No info. on music leaf. Formerly folded horizontally and bound as front endleaves in Woc Q. 50, which has materials copied in the 13th century, primarily in England, inside a 15th-century Worcester binding. Music is mostly palimpsest; nothing is known of the erased and overwritten original music aside from what is legible of no. 4.

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

Two bifolia (a, b), now nested and sewn together, apparently from the same volume but not consecutive, nor is either the middle of a gathering; originally ca. 240 x 170 mm, now 215 x 142 mm (a) and 220 x 150 mm (b). Fol. a2 has an old foliation XIII. Bifolium "a" has a variety of rulings, some under palimpsest, with written space for the two-stave systems on fols. a2-a2v of ca. 171 x 122-127 mm and staff gauge 9 mm for five lines. On frag. "b", original written space ca. 210 x 125 for five three-stave systems of gauge 12-13 mm for five lines. Possibly the fragment should be reversed around the centerfold so that bifolium "b" is outermost; contents would then have the following order of items: nos. 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9 beginning appropriately with the Marian sequence Benedicta es and ending with a page of erasure and palimpsest.

II. HISTORY

No info. on music leaves. Formerly rear endleaves in ms WOc F. 43, a source combining two English volumes of the late 13th century of texts of Roger Kilwardby; rebound at the British Museum in 1886, so no information on age or provenance of any former medieval binding.

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

Four small parchment fragments (a1, a2, b, c) that appear to be from the same source; originally from pages ca. 190 x 142 mm, with written space ca. 150 x 112 mm and staff gauge 8-9 mm; now 87 x 84 mm (a1), 87 x 139 mm (a2), 85 x 135 mm (b), 102 x 142 mm (c). Red four-line staves mainly in five two-staff systems per page for polyphony. Folio b verso has old foliation IIII.

II. HISTORY

No info. on music leaves. Formerly endleaves in ms WOc F. 109, an English volume of the late 13th or early 14th century containing works of Aquinas, in a 15th-century Worcester binding. In WF and RISM, item no. 2 is mis-identified as two separate works, and thus is mistakenly assigned two different WF numbers.

5. [E]rgo virgo tam beata fol. b verso [old foliation IIII]; frag. sequence a2; facs. PMMM 5, 64; ed. WF, no. 105

6. Paranimphus salutat virginem fol. c-c verso; frag. sequence a2; facs. PMMM 5, 63-64; ed. WF, no. 106

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

Four small fragments, probably from two different sources (A, B). Frag. A is a single parchment scrap of polyphony ca. 54 x 107 mm ruled in red five-line staves of gauge 13-14 mm. Notation is EMN with long-rhomb motion. Hand does not look like RECON I or II.

Frag. B (not reproduced) consists of three frags. (a, b, c) of plainchant sequences on four-line staves of width 130 mm and gauge 10-11 mm: frag. a now 212 x 33 mm; frag. b now 34 x 286 mm, frag. c now 36 x 141 mm.

II. HISTORY

No info. on music leaves. Not recorded in WF or MMBL, but accounted for by Büttner (1990) and Thomson (2001). They were removed from manuscript WOc F. 34, an English manuscript of the second half of the 13th century, which has a Worcester binding of the late 15th or early 16th century. Frag. xxviii also comes from the binding of this book, but unlike that fragment (and contrary to Thomson), the present Frag. A does not come from RECON I.

Frag. A, fol. 1v; two staves of a repetitive tenor, one staff of second hocketing voice

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

Single horizontal parchment strip, 64 x 275 mm, cut from a bifolium (fols. A and B). Freely ruled red five-line staves of gauge 16 mm. Original written area, if for 12 staves of music and text, was ca. 310 mm in height; if for 9 staves, ca. 235 mm. Text hand mixes gothica textualis quadrata, semi-quadrata, and sine pedibus. Musical notation basically Franconian (square breve), with long-breve declamation.

II. HISTORY

No info. on music leaf. Front binding fragments from WOc F. 45, an early 14th-century English copy of the Legenda aurea in a contemporary binding. Frag. xxxix/2 (not reproduced) is a parchment flyleaf with a few notes and letters of offset from Frag. xxxix/1.

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

Single parchment leaf, fol. i, trimmed to ca. 160 x 105 mm, with original written space ca. 115 x 80 mm ruled for five red two-stave systems, the upper staff of five lines and the lower staff of four, with staff gauge 9 mm and 7 mm, respectively. Red and blue initials. Book hand is a neat gothica rotunda. Music notation of Notre Dame style.

II. HISTORY

Front flyleaf, about which nothing is known, in a codex assembling three volumes of Franciscan sermons copied in the late 13th century. Codex origin unknown, but likely for a Franciscan house. WOc Q. 19 arrived late in the history of the Cathedral library: "not at Worcester before s. xv and only attested there 1622-23" (Thomson 2000). Music leaf uncovered by 1993 (Malyshko) and again in the late 1990s recataloguing of the Cathedral Library. Malyshko (1998, 76) judges the polyphony to be "an English adaptation of a French work"; Thomson (2000) concludes it to be "a leaf from a Parisian book of sacred polyphony."

PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

The partial remains (30 or more folios, 60 or more pieces) of a substantial codex (140 or more total folios). Some pages have original foliations in red, and these leaves, bifolia, and nested bifolia sometimes form blocks of continuous material from the following original folios: vi-vii, xiii-xvi, xxxvi, lxxiii-lxxviii, lxxvi-lxxvii, lxxix, lxxxii-lxxxiii, lxxxviii-lxxxix, lxxxii-lxxxiii, lxxxix-ci, cxxxvi, cxxxix. Losseff (1994), 149-52, has a very useful diagram projecting the gathering structures that can be determined from these materials. The relative location of the seven fragmentary folios from Lbl Hatton 30, and WOc Add. 68, Frag. xiii and Frag. xl (containing item nos. 53-69) cannot be determined. The leaves are variously trimmed, but appear originally to have been ca. 280-283 x 200-205 mm with written space mainly ca. 205 x 145-155 mm for nine red five-line staves of gauge 13-15 mm. On the music and text hands, see esp. Wibberley (1976).

HISTORY

In the literature this book is known as "the small format volume" or "the motet book," to distinguish it from RECON II and RECON III. The original book of music was likely broken up by a Worcester monk-binder, John Musard, only in the 1520s. Its pages were re-used in Worcester bindings of ca. 1527-31 for more than ten extant manuscripts, some of demonstrable Worcester provenance, and most surviving in Worcester Cathedral Library. A previous attempt at reconstruction in Ob Lat. liturg. d. 20 combines surviving leaves formerly in Ob Auct F. inf. 1.3 and Ob Hatton 30 with photos of leaves from Lbl Additional 25031 and WOc Additional 68, Frag. x (from WOc F. 125), Frag. xi (from WOc F. 133), Frag. xiii (from WOc Q. 21), Frag. xxviii (from WOc F. 34), and Frag. xxxi (from WOc Q. 31). The materials in Lbl Additional 25031 are still in place. New fragments, two with original foliations, were found in volumes at Worcester Cathedral Library by Olga Malyshko in 1993 and again during the recataloguing of the library in the later 1990s, and most of these have been removed to the fragment series in Add. 68. They include material from WOc F. 44 (now Frag. xli), F. 120 (now Frag. xl), and F. 175 (now Frag. xlii). A bit of material still remains in F. 44 that probably also belongs in this reconstruction. Offsets onto binding boards survive in situ for Frags. xxxi, xl and xli.

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

This reconstitutes the partial remains (more than 13 folios, more than 32 pieces) of a once substantial music codex with overall dimensions of ca. 330 x 223 mm [330 x 220 in Dittmer and RISM], a written space of 267 x 170-80 mm ruled in twelve red five-line staves of gauge 13-14 mm, and decoration in red, blue, and green.

The fragments comprise single leaves, bifolia, and nested bifolia from the lost music codex. There are eight discrete series of pieces. The order of presentation here principally follows WF and RISM. There is no surviving medieval evidence for this order aside from some local continuities between leaves that are linked physically or by content. Contradicting Dittmer in WF, and also RISM, but following observations in WMH and EEH, we assume no continuity between Ob 20, fol. 31 and Ob 20, fol. 32, thus turning WF, 60 into two items, the present nos. 20 and 21. (Indeed, there is no reason to assume that fol. 31 originally preceded fol. 32.) Further, both RISM B/IV/1, 554 and PMFC XIV, 243 report Ob 20, fol. 34 as following fol. 35, but by assuming that item 29 spanned an opening (verso to recto), and given that fol. 35 has a center gutter, we have instead retained fol. 34 before fol. 35, but with the reversal of recto and verso for fol. 34, so that the opening spans 34r and 35r (as per the photo captions in PMMM 6, 43).

Offsets on the inside front and rear covers of Oxford, Bodleian Library, Bodley 862 (photographically reversed as Ob 20, fols. 27a recto-verso) preserve the reverse image of one surviving page (fol. 6 = Ob 20, fol. 28 recto) and one otherwise lost page.

II. HISTORY

In the literature this book is known as "the large format volume," to distinguish it from RECON I and RECON III. It was broken up in the mid 15th century at Worcester and used there to provide materials for a local rebinding campaign (see Thomson (2000) and Thomson (2001), xlvi). Fragments have been discovered in three surviving codices. All were probably owned by Worcester Cathedral Library. At least one is of demonstrable Worcester origin and is still housed in Worcester Cathedral Library. A previous attempt at reconstruction in Ob Lat. liturg. d. 20 [Ob 20], fols. 23-35v, combines leaves formerly in Oxford, Bodleian Library, Bodley 862 with reversed photos of the offsets on its binding boards, and with photocopies of leaves from WOc Add. 68, Frags. ix and xxxv. Frag. ix came out of the binding of WOc Q. 72, an English manuscript of the middle of the 14th century. Frag. xxxv comes out of Oxford, Bodleian Library, Magdalene College 100, a 13th-century Worcester psalter whose flyleaves were detached and transferred back to Worcester in the 1920s. The presence of erasure and palimpsest reveals an effort to update the original music codex in the 14th century.

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

This reconstruction consists of parchment fragments now housed as WOc Additional 68, Frags. xix and xxxii. The ms order and proximity of the fragments cannot be fully ascertained. Together they comprise seven folios and eighteen items from a book whose original page dimensions were ca. 277 x 203 mm with written space of 220 x 155 mm, ruled in four three-stave systems, with red five-line staves of staff gauge 14-17 mm. All pages evidently were ruled at the same time as the parchment was prepared for music a3 in score. Frag. xix, leaves a, b, and c, comprise three bifolia. This account and the inventory below, following Summers (1983-85), reverse RISM's foliation, putting the leaves in the order c, b, a. Their trimming suggests they were once part of the same gathering, but contents suggest that the order should be c, b, a, and not a, c, b. Leaves c and b are adjoining, but there is at least one bifolium missing between b and a, and another missing within a, since it is not the center of a gathering. Only half of a1, b1, and c1 remain. Frag. xxxii is a single leaf; maximum current dimensions 238 x 206 mm.

II. HISTORY

Referred to by Dom Anselm Hughes as "The Conductus Book" (WMH, 23). Music of the 13th century was entered first on the left hand leaves of the gathering (c2, b2, a2), leaving the remainder blank. The right hand leaves (a1, b1, c1) were later filled in with 14th-century material. Broken up by Worcester monk-binder John Musard in the later 1520s and used in three or more Worcester bindings of ca. 1527-31. Frag. xix, leaf a, came out of WOc F. 64, an English ms of the late 12th or early 13th century. Frag. xix, leaves b and c, came out of WOc F. 37, a late 13th or early 14th-century English ms. Frag. xxxii is a former front pastedown in WOc Q. 24, an English ms of the late 13th or early 14th century.

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

Two parchment flyleaves once consecutive, since item 2 spans an opening (not recognizing this, RISM foliation reverses rectos and versos); perhaps cut from a bifolium that was the center of a gathering; now sliced in half horizontally with loss of the top part, and and trimmed vertically at the center fold; dimensions are now 101 x 141 mm and 106 x 140 mm, respectively, ruled in red five-line staves of width ca. 125 mm and staff gauge ca. 10 mm. If there were originally twelve staves per page, size would have been ca. 230 x 160 mm with written space ca. 190 x 125 mm. Notation is EMN with rhomboid breves.

II. HISTORY

No info. on music leaves. Once used as flyleaves in Buterus, Acta colloqui Ratisponnensis (1541); now housed in a modern collection of fragments as fols. 2-3. RISM nos. 6-8 are unrelated.

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

Two parchment leaves once front and rear flyleaves in the host ms; originally ca. 360 x 280 mm, now 280 x 245 mm; originally ten red five-line staves per page, with written space ca. 317 x 215 mm and staff gauge 22 mm; red and blue initials. Franconian and Petronian musical notation. Item no. 5 uses superacute G, square-b and F-clefs.

II. HISTORY

No info. on music leaves; probably from a larger series of troped chant settings of Alleluias. Host ms once belonged to the Benedictine abbey of St. Thomas Martyr in Arbroath, Scotland.

4. [Et in terra . . . Qui s]edes ad dexteram . . . / [T.]
fol. 2; two frag. voices of 15th-century void-notation Gloria
5. Alleluya confessoris almi presencia
fol. 2v; frag. triplum of troped chant setting a3 or a4 of an Alleluia for a Confessor; verse perhaps began "Veni" or "Veni nunc"

This entry is very much a “stub”.

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

Manuscript ca. 150 x 210 mm with written space mostly around 80/90 x 155/160 mm and staff gauge for five-line staff of ca. 9 mm. Consists of 26 gatherings, mostly intact but a few with a couple of missing leaves; gatherings nos. 1-23 may be the work of a single scribe, who copied an original corpus of works and some contemporaneous additions. The last three gatherings, nos. 24-26, represent an independent manuscript of similar dimensions and probably a similar history.

II. HISTORY

Made for and probably copied at the Augustinian priory of St. Andrews, Scotland. Its contents most likely were collected and copied in the 1230s, with ca. 1240 as the most widely accepted approximate date of completion.

IV. CONTENTS

Following Handschin, the contents are usually described as comprising 11 fascicles, each consisting of one or more gatherings. Fascicle 9, of ten gatherings, is by far the largest, and may arguably be understood as comprised of three fascicles (gatherings 13-15, 16-18, 19-22). Fascicle 11, gatherings 24-26, was once an independent manuscript. Fascicles 1-5 form a coherently organized group, with organa for mass and office arranged in descending order by number of voices, from four to three to two. Fascicles 8-10 form a second large, organized group, with conductus arranged in descending order by number of voices from three to two to one.

RISM enumerates 3228 items in W1. Most of the repertoire is an international Anglo/French corpus of organa and conductus, here recorded in the local “house style” of St. Andrews and using a dialect of Notre Dame-era notation with some distinctive insular characteristics. Listed below are simply the troped Sanctus and Agnus of W1, fascicles 3, 8, 9, 10 and the contents of the entire eleventh fascicle.

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

Two parchment folios, the front and rear flyleaves in the present host ms; foliated 1 and 222, with fol. 222v formerly pasted down; ca. 345 x 210 mm but now ca. 300 x 185-190 mm; written space 237 x 155 mm; ruled in a single column of nine freely ruled red five-line staves with gauge 18-19 mm and ruled indentations of 10 mm for major initials. Fol. 222v headed "In die," fol. 1 headed "Martino," and an "s" at the foot of these pages, all in red. Major initials elaborately flourished in red and blue; penwork capitals at internal textual subdivisions splashed with red. Text hand is gothica textualis rotunda; musical notation is essentially Franconian, with long-breve declamation and very infrequent, melismatic groups of semibreves; arabic numerals are used to indicate the number of single longs (two, three, four, eight) in the duplex longa.

II. HISTORY

No info. on music leaves. Flyleaves for a miscellany of theological and historical works copied in the mid to later 15th century. A pressmark indicates that the volume was once owned by James Usher (Ussher), Archbishop of Dublin (1581-1656); given by Charles II to Trinity College in 1661. The contents form part of a calendrical series of troped chant settings a3 of Alleluias; between the existing leaves was probably a single folio with the completions of nos. 2 and 3 (for Sept. 29 and Nov. 1) and one similar setting before nos. 3 and 4 (Nov. 11 and Nov. 30).

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

Pages perhaps originally ca. 180 x 135 mm, now trimmed at top and outer margin to 165 x 131 mm; written space variable from ca. 120 x 104 mm to ca. 120 x 120 mm or 144 x 108 mm; music on up to 10 red, freely drawn four-line staves per page of gauge 7-9 mm, averaging ca. 8 mm. Monophony and polyphony both use longs and rhomboid breves.

II. HISTORY

Ms is a miscellany of 121 fols. written in England. One of the items, Richard of Fournival's Bestiary, is dated 3 September 1267 on fol. 106v. Music copied into the first nine pages of the final item, a discrete ternium, fols. 116-121; there are unrelated non-musical texts on fol. 117 and on the final three pages that are not reproduced here. The mixture of Latin monodies and varied polyphonic genres is similar to Lbl Harley 978 and Lbl Arundel 248. The two well-known monodies (nos. 1 and 5) are also found near to each other in Cambridge, University Library, Additional 710.

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

Four parchment leaves used as front and rear pastedowns and flyleaves; foliated I, II, 165, 166; when first discovered, fols. Ir and 165v were pasted down, but they have since been lifted; fols. Iv and 165r, and fols. 166v and IIr, were originally facing pages; possibly fol. 166 follows 165 (needs examination of fol. 165v under uv); leaves now (and perhaps originally) 250 x 185 mm; written space 200 x 140 mm; pages ruled in a single column of twelve red five-line staves of gauge 11 mm, with a thirteenth staff, of four lines, added at the bottom of Iv. Initials in red and blue. Musical notation is Franconian.

II. HISTORY

Bound into an early 15th-century paper manuscript of 164 fols. containing the works of Terence.

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

Four parchment folios, cut in half horizontally with loss of about one music staff and folded once vertically to form eight front and eight rear flyleaves (fols., 1-8 and 157-64) in the binding of ms 654; now removed, preserved in a small oblong binder, and renumbered fols. 1-4; fols. 1-2 and 3-4 are consecutive; these fragments are now ca. 175-200 x 130-135 mm, perhaps originally 300 x 200 mm, with written space 235 x 145-150 mm (for eleven staves); arr. in single columns of ten or eleven free-ruled, red five-line staves per page (a twelfth staff was added to 1r and 2r) with staff gauge 13.5-17 mm and one-staff indentations of 5-7 mm for initials. Red tenor initial for Barbara simplex; all others in blue. Alternating red and blue used for other ornamental decorations. Inked faces on capital "O"s at beginning of second section of bipartite motets nos. 1, 8 appear not to be part of original decoration. Variety of notation and mensuration types: binary EMN with rhomboid breve and tailed, rhomboid semibreve (nos. 2, 4, 7, 8); binary ars antiqua mensural with square breve (nos. 1 [part 1], 5, 6, 9); ternary ars antiqua mensural with square breve (no. 1 [part 2], second mode; no. 3, first mode).

II. HISTORY

No info. on music leaves. Written for Meaux Abbey? Cut down and bound as flyleaves into a parchment ms of the 13th and 14th centuries, written in England, that once belonged to Meaux Abbey. This book, containing the Liber de IX scientiis et sermones, still bears its original Meaux Abbey pressmark, Y xviiiij. The leaves were already associated with MS 654 between 1439-1452; the MS now has a seventeenth-century English binding of brown calf. Purchased by alumni for the University of Chicago from W. M. Voynich in 1923. For a discussion of provenance and dating, inscriptions and graffiti, etc., of the host ms, see Greene (1954).

I. PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

Four sets of parchment fragments, including three (A, B, C) that were once musical flyleaves now removed, unfolded and kept separately in an envelope, and some pages of erased music still in the parent manuscript (D). The first three are of the later 13th century and the fourth is of the mid 14th. These may all have come from different sources.

Fragment A

A page from what seems to have been a rotulus notated on both sides with music, mainly in double columns; now in two fragments, the upper portion (once fol. 3 and 4) measuring 257 x 300 mm and the lower portion (once fol. 2 and 5) measuring 245 x 190 mm, with fol. 2 just a stub; about one whole staff is missing between the upper and lower portions, with some of its notes and text still visible. Recto has all or part of 18 visible red five-line staves, and four more would be required at the top to complete item no. 1, for a total of 22 staves; verso has all or part of 19 visible red five-line staves, with two or more cut off at the bottom that would have been necessary to complete upper voices and a tenor for item 5. Width of written space is ca. 295 mm and of each single column is ca. 140 mm, with staff gauge 17-18 mm. Overall written area for 22 staves was thus ca. 620 x 295 mm. Given that the recto is incomplete at the top and the verso is incomplete at the bottom, this page was originally at least ca. 750 x 330 mm overall. There are one- and two-staff indentations of 16 mm for initials. Musical notation is EMN on recto and Franconian (two different hands) on verso.

Fragment B

Single parchment leaf, once folded vertically on the left to form fol. 1 and 6, trimmed on all four sides with loss of music at the top, now 257 x 190 mm ; eleven red five-line staves of gauge ca. 13.5 mm visible on the recto. RISM suggests the original had 13 staves, but if the damaged voice at the top was complete on this page, then there must have been at least 17 staves, implying overall dimensions ca. 400 x 210 mm and a written space of ca. 360 x 172 mm. Given these dimensions, and that the verso has no music on it (it contains 14th-century monastic granger's accounts from Revesby Abbey), this leaf may have come, like fragment A, from a rotulus. Red ink is used for the English text of the tenor of item 1. Layout, music and text hands, and notation in EMN similar to Fragment C.

Fragment C

Single narrow vertical parchment strip now 257 x 54 mm; once folded vertically down the middle to form folios Y and Z; recto and verso have visible left and right margins; ten red five-line staves visible on both sides (gauge ca. 14.5 mm on the recto and ca. 15.5 mm on the verso) but there is lost of music at the top and possible also at the bottom; the page was probably originally ruled for at least twelve staves and perhaps 15 or more, if top voice on recto covered seven staves like the second voice (height of written spaces thus ca. 315-395 mm or more). Though dimensions are slightly different, the layout, music and text hands, and notation in EMN are similar to Fragment B.

Fragment D

One parchment bifolium, fols. 35-36, not the center of a gathering; trimmed on the top and outer edges; music now erased, overwritten, and virtually illegible; the present center fold is not the original gutter, so there is loss of some music on fol 35-35v but the original second recto begins near the right side of fol. 35v and extends into fol. 36, so its written space is basically intact horizontally; fol. 35-35v ruled in four systems of three five-line staves with double-texting under each; the staves are rastrum ruled with a gauge of 13 mm; the full height of each system is 48-50 mm, with a finger gap between systems; the page lying across fol. 35v-36 was rastrum ruled in 12 five-line staves (now 11, with the loss of the top staff) with gauge 13 mm and width 153-55 mm; the written space was originally about 235 x 155 mm, indented 9 mm from frame-rule, which are likely the same original dimensions as on fols. 35-35v; top two visible staves (originally top three) indented for a major initial; the word "tenor" is written between the bottom two staves. Franconian long-breve notation for item 1 and 3; Ars nova notation with breves, semibreves, and minims for item 2.

II. HISTORY

No info. on music leaves. Written for Revesby Abbey? The flyleaves were once bound into a 14th-century English copy in parchment of Walter of Lille's Alexandreis. This manuscript is partly palimpsest over erased accounts from Revesby Abbey and polyphonic music (D). Fragment B also has accounts from Revesby on the verso. The present binding dates from the 16th century.
