Symposium presenters discuss the process of creating ethnic based scholarship enclaves at a predominantly White university and nationally.

This Symposium discusses the need for people of color to collaborate in scholarship that represents their unique perspectives, investigates their populations of interests, and proposes new paradigms that explicate a worldview consistent with people of color. The presenters will discuss the process of creating ethnic based scholarship enclaves at a predominantly White university and nationally. There will be a discussion on how to engage in activities that lead to creating tangible products that can be used by ethnic communities, beyond the university. Participants in the roundtable will be encouraged to brainstorm about ways to collaborate with other people of color on their campuses to begin a strategy for cultural scholarship production.
