Ever since the early Romans put salt on lettuce to make it tasty, salads have been eaten and enjoyed. The custom of eating greens with oil and seasonings spread from Italy to Spain and France. In time, salads became popular in England and America.

Salads are good eating, a good source of vitamins and minerals, and generally low in calories. They offer contrast in color, flavor and texture. Greens and citrus fruits contribute vitamin C; dark green and yellow foods are rich in vitamin A; and meats, cheese, and eggs add protein, some of the B vitamins, and iron.

Greens are an important part of the salad and there are many to choose from. Lettuce is most frequently used. Varieties of lettuce include iceberg, leaf, Boston, Bibb and romaine. Other greens often used are cabbage, celery, endive, escarole, watercress, spinach, mint, and parsley.

Use young, crisp, and tender greens for salads. Wash them carefully in cold water to remove all dirt and grit. Use a colander or wire salad basket. Drain carefully and dry between towels, then store in plastic bag or vegetable crisper in the refrigerator until needed. With few exceptions, the salad should be mixed just before serving.
Kinds of Salads

Salads may be made from a single variety of green or a combination of fruits, vegetables or meats on crisp greens, with salad dressing. With imagination, it becomes easy to find the right salad for every occasion.

A main dish salad is a meal by itself. For this, combine strips of turkey, chicken, or meat, strips or cubes of cheese and slices of hard-cooked egg with salad greens and dressing. Make a lighter main dish by using a variety of fresh or canned fruits with cottage cheese or sherbet.

The most frequently served salad is the one eaten with the main course of the meal. This usually contrasts in flavor, color and texture with the rest of the menu. Appetizer salads are often made of tart fruits or seafoods in small amounts. Fruit and frozen salads are enjoyed for dessert.

Hearty vegetable salads include hot or cold potato salad, bean salads, or stuffed tomatoes. Cole slaw is made from shredded green or red cabbage and may be accented with pieces of fruit, carrots, peanuts, caraway or dill seed.

Fruit salads are fresh, canned, or frozen fruits in various shapes and sizes. Colors and flavors should complement each other; vary texture with toasted nuts, coconut or miniature marshmallows. Lemon, orange, or pineapple juice sprinkled over such fruits as apple or banana will keep them from darkening.

Molded gelatin salads are pretty to look at, easy to prepare and serve. Fruits and vegetables that are added are folded into the gelatin mixture when it has thickened to the consistency of unbeaten egg white. Gelatins can be varied by using fruit juice or gingerale for the liquid or blending in sherbet or sour cream. When gelatin salads are arranged in layers, each layer should be set before adding the next one.
Special molds are available in fancy shapes for making gelatin salads. The ring mold is a popular shape and the center can be filled with fruit, vegetables, cheese or a bowl of dressing when served. Common household items, such as muffin pans, ice cube trays or custard cups make effective molds.

Before unmolding a gelatin salad, moisten the serving plate and the top surface of the salad. Then the salad can be centered on the plate without marring its shape. Dip the mold in warm water for a few seconds, loosen the top edge with the tip of a paring knife, and place serving plate on top of mold. Hold in place, and turn mold upside down. Shake gently and lift off mold.

Salad Dressings

The three basic types of dressing are French, mayonnaise and cooked. Different seasonings can be used with each one, making variations to suit every taste. For best results, add the dressing at the last minute and use just enough to coat the salad ingredients.

1. French dressing is a combination of oil and vinegar with salt, pepper, paprika and mustard. Any of the different vinegars may be used. Because the oil and acid separate on standing, shake the dressing before using. French dressing is best on fruit, gelatin and tossed green salad.

2. Mayonnaise is a stable dressing of egg yolk, vegetable oil, acid and seasoning. Russian dressing is a popular variation made by adding chili sauce, chopped onion, and chopped green pepper. Make another variation, Thousand Island dressing, by adding sweet pickle relish and chopped hard-cooked egg. Mayonnaise is frequently used with vegetable and meat salads and sometimes with fruit salads.

3. Cooked salad dressing is made with vinegar or fruit juice thickened with flour, cornstarch or egg yolk plus seasoning. Whipped cream or sour cream may be folded in. Cooked dressing is especially good on fruit, chicken, potato or gelatin salad.
Garnishes

Garnishes add to the attractiveness of the salad. A sprig of water cress or parsley, a ripe olive, small pickled beet or stuffed prune may add just the contrast in shape or color needed. On the garnish may be a dash of paprika, strip of pimento, pomegranate seeds, slice of hard-cooked egg or nutmeats. As a general rule garnishes are edible.
