INTRODUCTORY.

railroad center of a great state, and aside from its commercial advantages has charms that will always attract large number of wealthy and desirable residents who desire to make their homes where the advantages of a metropolis and the cultured society of an educational city may be enjoyed.

The Lincoln Directory for 1891 contains 16,201 names; estimating population on this basis directory publishers differ widely as to the number of people which each name represents, some claiming 2, others $2\frac{1}{2}$, still other classes using 3, $3\frac{1}{2}$ or 4, and some as high as By applying four of the most conservative of these tests to the directory under consideration we obtain the following results: $16,201 \times 2\frac{1}{2} = 36,405$ population. $16,201 \times 2\frac{1}{2} = 40,502$ population. $16,201 \times 3 = 48,603$ population. $16,201 \times 3\frac{1}{2} = 56,704$ population.

Lincoln hopes to become a city of 100,000 people in less than ten years. The facts collated for this volume show that rapid and satisfactory progress is being made toward that ambitious goal

Lincoln Street Directory.

EXPLANATION.

Streets running north and south are named by using the numbers from 1st to 45th, commencing at the western extremity of the original town with 1st street. For convenience in numbering, these streets are divided by O street, and to all that portion running north from O, north is prefixed; to that portion south of O, south is prefixed. A number is allowed for every $12\frac{1}{2}$ feet, and 100 numbers are allowed for each block.

Streets running east, and west are named by using the letters of the alphabet, commencing at the southern extremity of the original town with A street, omitting I, and ending with Z. The same system of numbering is followed as in those streets running east and west.
